WASHINGTON NOTES.

Proposed Reduction of the Revenue Force—Retrocession of the Sentences of Capt. Stevens—Postal Telegraphy.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—Mr. Dawes, in a letter to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, expresses his hearty approval of the latter's proposed plan of reduction of internal revenue officers by the abolition of the offices of Assessor and Assistant Assessor. He promises early consideration for it by the Ways and Means Committee, it ready for prompt submission to them. Many other members of Congress have likewise given it their approval verbally, so that it would seem the proposed change is likely to be adopted.

THE SENTENCE OF CAPT. T. H. STEVENS REVOKED.

By order of the Secretary of the Navy the sentence of Capt. Thos. H. Stevens, who was suspended from rank for three years in consequence of the loss of the Guerriere in the Mediterranean over a year ago, is revoked, and he is restored to his position at the head of the list of Captains. The principal reason for the revocation of the sentence is the valuable services of Capt. Stevens during the rebellion. His suspension has cost him three chances for promotion to the rank of Commodore.

THE POSTAL TELEGRAPH BILL.

The House Committee on Appropriations have agreed to report favorably upon the estimate of six millions for Indian service, and of thirty millions for pensions. The Committee now have under consideration the Postal Telegraph bill of Hon. Frank W. Palmer, one of the members of the Committee, so far as the same may have possible influence upon the general appropriations for the Post-office Department. At one time the Committee had nearly agreed to report favorably upon the bill, but definite action has not yet been taken. It is understood that Gen. Garfield does not favor the scheme.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

ARCTIC EXPLORATION.

The United States Hydrographic Office, under Capt. Wyman, continues to make accessible to Americans and Englishmen the publications for their nations on the expeditions to the Arctic regions. The large volume discussed in the Geographical Mittheilungen, of 1872, page 155, is being followed by supplements containing the later accounts. The second contains a valuable chart of the European Arctic Ocean, which combines, in a very practical manner, all explorations up to 1870, and deep-sea soundings in relation to currents, and magnetic observations.

MECHANICS' AND WORKING MEN'S NATIONAL COUNCIL.

The second meeting of the Mechanics' and Working Men's National Council was held here last night. All the trades and labor interests of the country were represented. The Council effected a permanent organization, and elected N. E. Robinson President, Gen. Sweeney and E. H. Merrill Vice-Presidents for the ensuing year, and O. C. Boozer Secretary. The Council will convene every two weeks; delegates from all the measures of interest throughout the United States will be admitted to seats and entitled to hold them, until succeeded by other delegates; and thus a continued session for the consideration of the interests of mechanics and working people will be secured. The action of the Council thus far promises good results.

FRANCE.

Cabinet Deliberation on the Majority Report on the Address—The Crisis Believed to be Over—The Minority Committee on Reform.

PARIS, Nov. 27.—A meeting of the Cabinet will be held today, for deliberation upon the report of the majority of the Committee on the Address, and the resolution of the minority.

M. Thiers will attend the session of the Assembly to-morrow, when the report of the majority will come up for consideration.

The vote, yesterday, postponing immediate consideration of the report has served to greatly allay the excitement of the past few days, and many believe the crisis has passed. Paris is quiet this morning, and dispatches from the provinces report a corresponding degree of tranquility.

PARIS, Nov. 27.—The resolution adopted by the minority of the Committee on the address in reply to M. Thiers' message proposing to the Assembly the nomination of a committee to present a bill establishing ministerial responsibility, and embodying the necessary constitutional reforms, fixes the number of members of said committee at thirty, not thirty-five, as stated yesterday.

MARINE DISASTERS.

Steamers in a Hurricane—Two Disabled—Collision in Hampton Roads.

HALIFAX, N. S., Nov. 27.—The steam-ship Hesper, of the Temperley line, from London, thirty days out, bound for Montreal, with a general cargo, has arrived here in distress, having experienced a hurricane off Newfoundland, which swept her decks. She lost her foremast and sails and had her bulwarks stove. She will be repaired here before proceeding.

The schooner Rescue, which was ashore at Fort Caledonia, has been got off.

The steam-ship Merlin, of North Sydney, from St. John, N. F., was nearly wrecked in a gale on the 19th. She lost her sails, and some of her crew were injured. The schooner Miss Jane broke away from the wharf, and had her bulwarks stove and jibboom carried away.

The Cunard steamer Delta, coming into safe harbor, ran into the schooner Saline, of Trurump Cape, smashing her bowsprit, carrying away her maintopmast, and doing other damage.

The chief engineer of the Cunard steam-ship Malta was seriously injured by falling into the hold of that vessel.

Loss of a Schooner on Little Hickoryman and all Hands.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 27.—A private dispatch from Pentwater, Mich., says that the schooner Kennedy went ashore last night near Ludington, and that all hands were lost. No particulars were given.

Collision of a Schooner with a Schooner.

NORFOLK, Va., Nov. 27.—The schooner S. S. Richman and the steamer Louisiana, hence for Baltimore, came in collision in Hampton Roads last evening. The schooner lost her bowsprit and all her headgear, and the steamer was considerably damaged above the water-line. They made temporary repairs and proceeded to Baltimore this morning.

MICHIGAN.

Official Vote—Grant's Majority Over Greeley, 59,465—Total Vote.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LANSING, Mich., Nov. 27.—The official majority for Grant over Greeley, in Michigan, is 59,465; over all, 54,401. The vote was, Grant 185,944; Greeley, 16,779; O'Conor, 2,832; Black, 1,368. Total vote, 216,123.

LOUISIANA.

The Election Litigation—Bonds of the North Louisiana Railroad.

NEW-ORLEANS, Nov. 27.—The Kellogg-Warmoth case is proceeding in the Federal Court. Messrs. Eustis and Howe argued for the defendants today.

The Eighth District Court today dismissed the injunction suit restraining Auditor Stokes from paying interest on bonds issued to the North Louisiana Railroad. Attorney-General Ogden appeared for the State, the affairs of the office having been turned over to him by his predecessor, Gen. Belden.

ALABAMA.

Trying to Settle the Legislative Trouble—Official Vote for Presidential Electors.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 27.—The entire day has been spent in awaiting the action of Committees, appointed by each body, for the purpose of trying to effect a settlement of the pending trouble. Nothing definite has been arranged.

The official vote for Grant Electors in this State is 90,272, for Greeley, 79,481; for O'Conor, none.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Balloting for a United States Senator.

RALEIGH, N. C., Nov. 27.—The second ballot for United States Senator today resulted as follows: Vance, 78; Merrimon, 29; and Poole, 12. The vote will be taken again to-morrow, and it is hard to tell how the matter will end. The general business of the Legislature was unimportant.

BIGAMY.

Trial of Henry Porter Tenison at Poughkeepsie—Letters From His First Wife.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Nov. 27.—Henry Porter Tenison, the alleged lineal descendant of the Archbishop of Canterbury, who has been confined in jail here on the charge of bigamy, had a further hearing before Recorder Taylor to-night. The Court-room was crowded, and the street in the vicinity was packed with a dense mass. The most important witness was Mr. D. C. Spaulding, of Detroit, who testified that the prisoner admitted to him that he was married before he eloped with the lady from this city; but that he expected to get a divorce from his first wife. Letters were also shown which were written to Tenison, dated Toronto, Canada, and signed "Your own dear wife, Jane Tenison." Directly after Mr. Spaulding had finished his testimony, Tenison made several attempts to open Court to strike him, but was prevented by an officer. After the examination the case was further adjourned till Saturday morning at 10 o'clock, and the prisoner was taken back to jail. The Grand Jury also have the case under deliberation.

THE DEATH PENALTY.

Execution of Michael Moore for the Murder of His Wife.

EBENSBURG, Penn., Nov. 27.—Michael Moore, whose crimes are among the blackest on record, was executed here today, in the jail-yard attached to the prison. On the 1st of last March the body of a woman, burned almost to a crisp, was found near Mineral Point Station, on the Pennsylvania Railroad.

It is proved to be Moore's first wife, who had deserted him on account of brutal treatment, and went to Philadelphia, where she resided as a domestic for some years after the separation. Moore married again, telling the clergyman who married him that his first wife was dead.

His earliest spouse appears to have been still true to him, and the neighbors, complaining of Moore living there with a woman not his lawful wife, gutted the place in January, whereupon Moore went to Philadelphia, and induced his first wife to leave her home there and accompany him to Mineral Point. The unsuspecting woman did so, and on the 29th of February last Moore, with his wife, got off the train at Mineral Point.

He enticed her to a deep woodland, where he most brutally butchered her, and made a bonfire of her remains. Tracks in the snow led to and from the spot where the deed was committed. Footprints led to the house of Moore.

He was arrested, tried, convicted, and today was fixed for the execution. He is a man of brutal disposition, but cowardly in heart, and last night paced his cell to and fro, weeping as if his heart would break, and trembling like a leaf at the thought of the fate awaiting him on the morrow.

He declared his innocence of the crime, and accused his brother of being the instrument of his execution. He was attended by Father Christie, of the Catholic Church, and by the Sisters of St. Joseph. He passed a sleepless night, but not an hour of repose this morning, when he was awakened by the priest, who administered to him the last rites of the Church.

At 11:30 a mournful procession approached the gallows, headed by Sheriff Bonsacker, the condemned, and Father Christie. Moore appeared quite calm, and walked boldly with a crucifix in his hands, and responding to the Litany of Souls recited by the priest.

On the scaffold being reached, he took a seat on a chair, and submitted to the operation of his legs being bound. The Sheriff then said, "Mike, if you have got anything to say, now is the time to say it." Moore replied, "No, nothing more than to ask you all to pray for me, that God may forgive my sins."

The black cap was then drawn over his head, and the priest and Deputy Sheriffs left the scaffold. The bolt holding the trap in place was withdrawn, and Moore fell like a log. His neck snapped so distinctly that it could be heard by those near the platform.

The body spun around and around, and after hanging twenty-five minutes was cut down and placed in a coffin. Moore said all along that he would declare his innocence on the scaffold, but failed to do so, and in consequence is now generally believed to have been guilty of all the crimes laid to his charge. His body will be buried at 2 o'clock by the graves of Houser and Bonser, who were executed here in 1866.

THE WEATHER.

Synopsis and Probabilities.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 28—1 A. M.—The barometer has risen on the lower lakes and over the Eastern and Middle States, with clear weather and westerly to northerly winds; from the Ohio Valley southward to the Gulf and South Atlantic coasts, northerly and northeasterly winds with partly cloudy weather; in the Northwest, over the upper lakes, and thence to the Ohio Valley and Missouri, southerly and westerly winds, with generally clearing and clear weather.

PROBABILITIES.

For the lower lakes, and thence over the New-England and the Middle States, northerly to westerly winds, increased pressure, and clear weather; for Tennessee, the Gulf and the South Atlantic States, northerly winds, veering to northwesterly, with partly cloudy and clearing weather; in the Northwest and thence to the lower and middle Ohio Valley and Michigan, south-westerly winds, diminishing pressure, and partly cloudy and warmer weather.

M., 30°; 9 A. M., 32°; 12 M., 35°; 3 P. M., 40°; 6 P. M., 40°; 9 P. M., 38°; 12 P. M., 34°. Average temperature yesterday, 35½°.

NITRO-GLYCERINE.

Three Men Killed and Others Seriously Injured.

Terrific Explosion Yesterday at Carmansville—A Scene of Horror and Agony—Statement of One of the Injured Workmen.

About 3 P. M. yesterday while over fifty men were engaged in blasting rocks, &c., forming the new One Hundred and Forty-fifth-street, a premature explosion of nitro-glycerine occurred, which had been placed in the hole, and resulted tragically. Two men named Edward Foley, of One Hundred and Forty-first-street and Eighth-avenue, and Nixon Raifih, residence unknown, were instantly blown to pieces, and another, named Patrick Conway, was so seriously injured that he died on entering the Thirty-second Precinct Station-house. Three others, named Michael Buckley, of One Hundred and Forty-seventh-street and Seventh-avenue; Peter Mooney, of One Hundred and Forty-first-street and Seventh-avenue, and Patrolman John Armstrong, of the Thirty-second Precinct, who was passing by at the time, were seriously injured. The men were engaged in blasting the rocks in One Hundred and Forty-fifth-street, and the cause of the explosion is unknown.

Michael Buckley, one of the injured men, who was taken to the Reception Hospital on Ninety-ninth-street, last evening made a statement to a TIMES reporter. He said: At the time of the explosion I was engaged in filling casks and barrows with fragments of the blasted rock, when all at once, without any warning, I heard a terrific explosion, and the next moment I found myself covered with the pieces of rock. I was dug out by some of my fellow workmen, who returned to the scene of the explosion as soon as they could; I cannot explain how my life was spared; my left arm is broken, and I have several bruises, but the doctors say none are dangerous; I did not know that a blast was going to take place; before a hole is fired we generally get five minutes warning, so as to get far enough away from it; I thought that it was powder, but afterwards discovered that it was nitro-glycerine; I do not know how the accident occurred; a piece of rock may have fallen on the explosive material; at the time of the explosion I was within six feet of the hole; the foreman, Edward Foley, was blown to pieces; his body was found near Sixth-avenue, a long distance off; I don't know how I escaped being, so near to the hole; the other men who were killed, were above the hole; there were over fifty men working at the time; as soon as the explosion occurred they were frightened, and ran away, but soon returned and gave up and the other fellows all the assistance they could; I saw one man die in the Station-house as soon as I was taken there; he was fearfully bruised both internally and externally; there may have been some carelessness in putting the glycerine in the hole; the policeman who was injured, was on his beat, I think, when the accident occurred; there is a great deal of rock in this locality; a man named Peter Mooney, who was near me at the time, was also injured, but very slightly, and he is now at home.

The bodies of the killed were taken to the Thirty-second Precinct Station-house in One Hundred and Fifty-second-street and Tenth-avenue. The Coroner has been notified, and will investigate the matter today.

THE TRIP TO AFRICA.

H. M. Stanley Before the Geographical Society—What the President and Mr. Stanley Said.

The dinner of the American Geographical Society to Mr. Henry M. Stanley, given at Delmonico's, last evening, was attended by about seventy members and invited guests. Among those present were Judge Charles P. Daly, President of the Society, Hon. Clarkson N. Potter, Abraham S. Hewett, Gen. Egbert L. Viele, Douglas Taylor, Meyer Stern, Henry E. Pierrepont, Judge Brady, Rev. Dr. Henry W. Bellows, Gen. James G. Wilson, Col. F. A. Conking, Luther R. Marsh, Francis A. Stout, Col. T. Bailey Myers, Judge George Shea, Henry G. Stebbins, Judge Larremore, Bishop Clark of Rhode Island, Rev. Dr. E. H. Schenck, Judge Henry E. Davies, William H. Appleton, Richard Schell, Judge Curtis, S. S. Cox, John Livingstone, brother of the great traveler, and Edward Cooper. After waiting an hour, Mr. Stanley arrived, and the company then proceeded to the dining-hall, President Daly taking his seat at the head of the table.

The Chairman, later in the evening, in proposing the health of Mr. Stanley, congratulated the assembled guests on the fact that it was not then the play of "Hamlet," with the character of Hamlet left out, as it had been on the previous evening at Cooper Institute, and that they were not called on to witness the disappointment to which that large audience had been compelled to submit, from causes over which Mr. Stanley had no control. The toast was drunk with three loud hurrahs, and one cheer more.

Mr. Stanley on rising to speak, was greeted with renewed applause. He said that his reception by the American Geographical Society was very gratifying to him. It was not often that a prophet was honored in his own country. He regretted exceedingly to have been unable to attend the Society's reception at Cooper Institute; but his cause was that of Dr. Livingstone's after suffering from four, two fevers—he found himself very ill. He felt flattered at the thought that such an interest had been given to geographical discoveries, since his arrival in civilized lands. Mr. Stanley then referred to the Speke and Grant and the Baker expeditions, in order, as he said, to place his proper light on the difference between travelers of their ordinary calibre and a Livingstone. Dr. Livingstone was not the man to accuse the American Geographical Society of nefariness, though he might probably in his wrath accuse the Royal Geographical Society of sentence having hidden motives behind their actions. Dr. Livingstone believed the Lualaba to be the Nile. He would, of course, prefer to believe it to be the Nile. "And why," Mr. Stanley asked, "should we deny it to him; and why should he be denounced as a crazy lunatic and a liar because I defend him? Why did Dr. Baun attack this theory of Livingstone? Prof. Keipert feels persuaded that my expedition has been nothing more than a gigantic hoax, and he has denounced me as an impostor! Prof. Keipert declares he does not know where Uganyembe is, when there is not a child in New-York that does not know it is half way between Ujiji and the coast." [Applause.] Mr. Stanley here asked if the American Geographical Society could not step to the front, and do something in the way of exploration and discovery. If they could not discover the interior of Africa, perhaps they might explore the interior of China, or the North Pole, or the South Pole. Let the newspapers, other than the Herald, send their young men, who were burning with jealousy and envy, on another exploring expedition. Before he closed, Mr. Stanley said that the Lualaba River might, after all, turn out to be the Congo, and not the Nile.

Bishop Clark, Mr. Luther R. Marsh, Rev. Dr. Bellows, and others made short addresses. Mr. John Livingstone warmly thanked Mr. Stanley for what he had done. The speech-making terminated at a late hour.

A Probable Homicide.

On Saturday night last a quarrel sprang up in the liquor-saloon of Thomas Coggy, No. 14 East Seventy-second-street, between Coggy and Michael Lynch, of Third-avenue, near Ninety-sixth-street. During the fight Lynch was knocked down and stamped on by Coggy. The affair, by some means, did not come to the knowledge of the Police until yesterday, when Police Surgeon White proceeded to Lynch's residence, and found the injured man in a very dangerous condition. Capt. Oberry at once arrested Coggy, and notified Deputy Coroner Beach to take Lynch's ante-mortem statement.

Scranton Coal Sale.

Scranton coal took place yesterday, by John H. Draper & Co. Previous to the sale, it was announced that no lump coal would be offered this month, owing to the disease among the mules at the mines, but therefore the usual quantity will be regularly furnished. Last month's prices were only obtained on stove and chestnut coal. Seventy-five thousand tons were sold at the following prices: Steam-coal, 6c 7½ and 8c 6½; grate, 6c 12 and 6c 12½; egg, 6c 12 and 6c 12½; stove, 6c 70 and 6c 75; chestnut, 6c 75½ and 6c 75. The market shew an average rise over last month's sales on chestnut of three cents per ton, and on stove of twenty cents and a half cents per ton. Grate remains steady at last month's prices, while steam-coal has declined sixteen and three-quarter cents per ton, and egg three and three-quarter cents per ton.

FIRE.

Burning of the Lackawanna Valley House, Scranton, Penn., Last Night—Escape of the Inmates.

SCRANTON, Penn., Nov. 27.—The Lackawanna Valley House, one of the largest and finest hotels in this city, was destroyed by fire before daylight this morning. The hotel was crowded with guests, and the excitement was intense, men, women, and children being frantic with terror; but no lives were lost. The fire was first discovered by one of the Republican newspaper carriers, who immediately gave the alarm. The flames were seen issuing from the observatory on the centre of the house, and it was hoped that the flames would be confined to the roof. The fire, however, gained with great rapidity, and the roof soon fell to the floor beneath, when the total destruction of the hotel became inevitable. The Fire Department worked with the greatest energy, and were successful in confining the fire to the hotel. Most of the furniture was saved, and the greater part of the personal effects of the boarders. The loss to the building is estimated at about $100,000. It was owned by Mr. Robinson, of New-York, and was insured in the Brewers' and Maltsters' Company of that city. Mr. Baldwin, proprietor of the house, loses $10,000 on stock, and is insured as follows: North British Company, $4,000; Sun, $2,000; North American, $2,000; Franklin, $1,000. Several of the guests lost personal property, amounting, in the aggregate, to $5,000. Two large clothing stores on the first floor were damaged by water to the amount of several thousand dollars, all of which is insured.

The origin of the fire is a mystery, but it is supposed to have originated from a defective flue. Several firemen were injured by falling timbers.

William Double and William White never spoke their words, and were killed instantly. The others, seemingly tough, were injured.

DUTCH HEINRICHS.

Sketch of a Noted Criminal's Career.

He is Said to be Mad—A New Trial to be Had—How the Prisoner Conducts Himself in the Tombs—Beating a Man in the Cell.

In cell No. 61, on the second tier of the Tombs Prison, there is now confined a man who, in his time, has braved the law more than any other, and on whom the arm of justice has now fallen with terrible vengeance. He is said to be mad, and all the cunning of his nature, which made him feared among honest men, has been shorn from him by one stroke of Providence. The name is Henry D. Neuman, better known as "Dutch Heinrichs," who was recently convicted of robbery and sentenced to State Prison for ten years. But few know the man's history, which is really a curious one. He was born in Northern Germany, and came to this country at an early age. His family is respectable, and his brother is now engaged in a reputable business in this City, and is well thought of among the merchants with whom he does business. The most intimate friends of Neuman have never been able to learn from him how he was first led into crime, but his criminal life, it would seem, was fostered by the turf bent. For a period of his rapidly-rich predatory occupations, and the quickness of his movements, he was also known by the soubriquet of "The Flying Dutchman." Neuman associated with the Greenthals and Mecklenbaums, the two great thieving families of this City, and in less complicated crime for which he was convicted. He snatched a watch from a Mr. Whitford, at the corner of Broadway and Canal-street, was arrested, convicted, and sent to State Prison for two years, by the late Judge Russell, in the Court of General Sessions. In State Prison at the time, was the noted bank robber, Chauncey Johnson, and a sympathy sprang up between the two. As a consequence, Heinrichs on his release joined Johnson, who had been liberated four months previously, in this City, and entered on his continuous career of crime. His depredations among the banks of the City were terrible for the reason of their frequency and success. The Lord bond robbery, in which Mr. Lord was plundered of over a million dollars in bonds, it is believed by Neuman, Chauncey Johnson, Jack Turney, and "Red Rum," the robbery of Mr. Fenuiz, in Vesey-street, of bonds worth $1,000; the stealing of $100 worth of bonds from the Adams Express Company, and many other crimes, made "Dutch Heinrichs" famous.

So notorious did he become that of late years he could not steal anything in Wall-street, as every office-boy knew him and pointed him out as a thief, and the man himself, before his conviction stated freely that although he was a thief, he had not stolen one dollar in this City for over three years. As usual, however, there were innumerable robberies laid to his door, for the inexpable detectives failing to find the real culprits, would inform a plundered citizen that he might attribute his depleted exchequer to the daring of Dutch Heinrichs, when there were scores of thieves who every day were plundering offices down-town, and who were not arrested because they were unknown to the Police. Regarding Neuman's character officially, the Police Department issued an order to gamble. One of the most capable detectives in the country, Officer William George Elder, once remarked that every great thief was a desperate gambler, for the reason that a thief, in order not to betray himself, must keep up the morbid excitement created by the commission of his crime. The Spaniard Garcia, whose wondrous success at trente-et-quarante in the Baden Baden Kursaal, excited the comment of European gamblers, did not possess a greater infatuation for the green cloth than Neuman. Seated at a faro table, he would frequently remain in a couple of hours the plunder for which he razed imprisonment, and rise from his coast ready to rob again and to gamble away the proceeds. He went into No. 102 Chatham-street, five years ago, with $8, broke the bank, and came out $5,000 winner. After one of his bar robberies, he lost $20,000 in one night. One of the best traits of the man's character is his domestic life. He married a young lady of very prepossessing appearance. On the 14th of February, 1870, the banking office of J. S. Kennedy & Sons, No. 41 Cedar-street, was robbed of $50,000 in bonds of the New-London and Appleton Railroad by two men, who escaped. A private detective gave information which led the plundered firm to apply for Neuman's arrest. Sergt. Quinn, of the Tombs Squad, and Detective Dulan, of the Sixth Precinct, arrested Neuman. The case was taken charge of by the Wall-street detectives, and what is termed "a dead set" was made against the prisoner. His own evidence was received, and he was convicted, though the detectives in the Central Office say that he is innocent, for at the time of the robbery Neuman was securely confined in Police Head-quarters on suspicion of having stolen a watch from ex-Mayor C. Godfrey Gunther. At State Prison Neuman became insane. It is alleged. His counsel appealed to the Supreme Court for a new trial, which was granted, on the ground that Neuman's evidence should have been received by the Court. The prisoner was brought down to the Tombs four days ago and locked up in cell No. 61, with Jacob Rosenzweig, who is accused of murdering Alice Bowlby. Neuman, in his crazy moments, imagines that Rosenzweig is a spy put to watch him, and pounds his fellow-prisoner numerically. During these spells he fails to recognise any one, even his counsel, and appears to be, in fact, a maniac.

RECRUITING SERVICE.

Details for Service from Jan. 1, 1873, to Oct. 1, 1874.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27.—By a general order just issued from the head-quarters of the army, the following is the detail for recruiting service from Jan. 1, 1873, to Oct. 1, 1874:

Col. J. B. Gregg, Eighth Cavalry, will relieve Col. Edward Hatch, Ninth Cavalry, as superintendent of the mounted recruiting service at St. Louis, at the depot, at St. Louis, Mo.; Col. John Gibbons, Seventh Infantry, will relieve Col. J. C. Davis, Twenty-third Infantry, as superintendent of the general recruiting service, station at New-York; Major J. P. Roy, Sixth Infantry, will relieve Major J. M. Schofield, Fourteenth Infantry, in command at the depot at Governor's Island, New-York Harbor; Major J. N. G. Whistler, Twenty-second Infantry, will report for duty at the subdepot at Newport Barracks, Kentucky. Regimental officers will be selected by their Colonels, according to the usual rules, and ordered to report in person on the former date to the superintendents for their respective arms. Details will be made from cavalry regiments to report to the superintendent of the cavalry service, at the St. Louis depot; and details from infantry regiments to report to the superintendent at New-York. Officers of the colored cavalry regiments will recruit especially for their regiments, under the existing arrangements, and all officers on general and mounted recruiting service, will continue to enlist men for colored regiments, as at present. Recruiting officers are expected to give their personal attention to their duties, and to adhere to the regulations governing them. The prohibition against the enlistment of minors and men of doubtful morals will be rigidly enforced. The superintendent in accepting recruits at the rendezvous. Tripler's Manual affords the required standard of qualifications, and it is, in like manner, the standard for inspection after the recruits arrive at the depot. Recruiting for the Engineer Battalion will be continued under the instructions contained in the letter from this office dated Oct. 5, 1871, subject to such changes in the detail of officers of the corps as the Chief of Engineers may deem expedient.

The Reduction of Expenses in the Board of Assistant Aldermen—Mr. Kelly's Reply to the Board.

The following communication from the Clerk of the Board of Assistant Aldermen was to have been read at the meeting called for yesterday, but which, owing to non-attendance of a quorum, was not held:

OFFICE OF CLERK OF THE BOARD OF ASSISTANT ALDERMEN, NO. 13 CITY HALL, NEW-YORK, Nov. 27, 1872.

To the Honorable the Board of Assistant Aldermen:

I have the honor to inform your honorable Board at your last meeting, directing me to "furnish an explanation of the items" I had sent to the Board of Appropriations for the expenses of the Board of Aldermen for 1873, that I did so at the time, that I do not acknowledge that your honorable Board, or any individual member thereof, has any right to demand or expect that I must "furnish an explanation" of any of my official acts, or those of my clerks, that any subject matter of the expenses transmitted by me to the Comptroller in no wise concerns the present Board of Assistant Aldermen, and that the "explanation" called for, is a "fishing for an excuse" for "investigation;" and, as a matter of courtesy and consideration to the members elected in the interest of "Reform," I will state that the estimate made by me was in response to one from the Board of Aldermen, in "South-street" instead to the least amount consistent with the proper administration of the Department.

I complied with that request in estimating the number of officers and attendants that should be employed in doing the work of the Department, at the same time estimating the salaries on a fair rate. As stated in my communication to the Controller, I am firmly convinced that the "work" can be done by a clerk, with a deputy and two assistant clerks, a doorkeeper, a sergeant-at-arms and two messengers, and with expense of not more than $13,000 for the year.

In conclusion, I will state that what I have done, I have done solely in the interest of Reform, and from the position I have taken in the matter, I cannot and will not swerve. Respectfully submitted,

M. J. KELLY, Clerk.

KANSAS.

The Official Majorities for the Republican State Ticket and Congressmen.

TOPEKA, Kansas, Nov. 27.—The vote of the State was canvassed today. The following are the official majorities: Osborn, (Rep.) for Governor, 31,077; Stone, for Lieutenant-Governor, 23,945; Smallwood, for Secretary of State, 26,836; Wilder, for Auditor, 24,138; Hayes, for Treasurer, 31,126; Williams, for Attorney-General, 29,445; McCarty, for Superintendent of Schools, 23,668; Kingman, for Chief-Justice, 23,722. The majorities on Congressmen, all Republicans, are Lowe, 23,918; Phillips, 23,690; Cobb, 21,861.

FIRE THIS MORNING.

A Soap Manufactory in First-Avenue Destroyed—Total Loss, $25,000.

Shortly after 12½ o'clock this morning, Sergt. McGiven, of the Seventeenth Precinct, found flames issuing from the rear windows of the upper floor of the building Nos. 135 and 137 First-avenue. The building, a three-story brick one, is occupied on the upper floors by David S. Brown, soap and candle manufacturer. It has been burnt out on two previous occasions. The flames spread rapidly, and soon gutted the soap manufactory. The building, which has a frontage of fifty feet, extends back into an alleyway 100 feet distant, and is surrounded by low tenement-houses. It was feared by Chief-Engineer Perley that these houses might catch fire, owing to the high wind prevailing, and a second alarm being sent out, the efforts of the Fire Department were devoted chiefly to the prevention of the conflagration spreading. The fire was subdued shortly after 1 o'clock. Mr. Brown lost $10,000 on stock and machinery, and the building was damaged $7,000. C. H. Reed, pork packer, occupying part of the first floor, lost $1,000 on stock, and E. Rafter, grocer, lost $1,500 on stock. Owing to the absence of the owners no details of the insurance could be procured.

ANOTHER FIRE.—At 2½ o'clock this morning an alarm of fire was given, flames being discovered in the large building No. 718 Broadway, next door to Lina Edwin's Theatre. As we go to press the flames have already enveloped the entire where it originated, and will no doubt be a disastrous one.

The Atlantic and Great Western and Erie Railroads.

A meeting of the trustees of the Atlantic and Great Western and Erie Railroads was held at the offices of S. L. M. Barlow, in William street, yesterday. The Boards of Counsel of both roads were present.

The meeting was called for the purpose of arriving at some means of settlement of a claim of the Atlantic and Great Western Railroad against the Erie corporation for $1,500,000, incurred by the former management.

Judge Hitchcock was directed by the meeting to draw up a lease, pending a foreclosure, and a committee was then appointed from each party for the purpose of amicably settling the matter and taking it from the jurisdiction of the Court in Ohio, where it is at present in suit. Should this arrangement not be consummated, the foreclosure will take effect.

Jay Gould was much exercised in consequence of the card of Commodore Vanderbilt, published yesterday, and gave as a reason for the Commodore's antipathy to him, that the latter came out second best in an attempt to gain the Presidency of Erie.

The Cost of Public Lamps.

Commissioner Van Nort, of the Department of Public Works, makes the following statement of expenditures for maintaining public lamps, exclusive of the cost of gas, for the ten months ending Oct. 31, last, showing a saving of $269,604 71, as compared with the expenditures for the same period in 1871; also, an estimate of liabilities for gas furnished the City; showing a total saving of $534,768 86 in ten months:

	1871.	1872.	Decrease.
Painting public lamps	$27,456 00	$4,771 22	$22,684 78
Lighting markets	1,548 94	1,248 94	300 00
Regilding and repairing lamps, &c	12,600 00	1,366 64	10,833 36
New street lamps	42,005 00	11,171 00	30,878 00
Cartage	847 00	300 75	546 25

UNITED ITALY.

Incidents and Questions of the Day.

The Public Schools of the Capital—The Religious Orders—The Approaching Session of Parliament—Relations with France—Miscellaneous Intelligence.

From Our Own Correspondent

ROME, Friday, Nov. 1, 1872.

The Public Schools of Rome are about to begin the Autumn term after a long Summer vacation, and the lists have been, for some time, open for the entrance of new names. All good patriots are interested in the success of these means and the increase of this power for raising the intellectual level of the common people. Popular instruction, so far as it is, at present carried, is still, to a very large extent, in the hands of the clerical party and their schools, and the number of pupils are three to one of those under the control of the municipal authority. The city schools are confined to secular instruction, while those under the direction of the clergy inculcate the dogmas of the Church, and teach the pupils to believe that the present Government of Italy is a usurpation, with no legitimate authority. Thus, here in Rome, as elsewhere, there is a constant peril to the stability of the State. The infidelity of the Church to the great principle of national unity is a trial to the patience of all those who love Italy. The members of the Hierarchy, high and low, are not only willing, but desire to see the provinces of this noble country parceled out among foreign States, with foreign masters still dominating over Italian populations. It is a sin which the Italian who loves his country, and desires that it may enjoy its just rights, cannot forgive, and never ought to forgive; these unnatural children corrupted by the beverage of fanatical teachings. The Church is as obstinately as ever determined to have an Empire of its own in temporis, and enjoy an immunity in overriding laws not in harmony with its domineering policy.

THE QUESTION OF THE RELIGIOUS ORDERS.

It is now pretty well understood that the French Cardinal, Bonnechose, is to come back to Rome before the opening of Parliament, to remain here during the time that the project of law concerning the religious orders is under discussion in that body. At the request of the Pope, and with the consent of the head of the French Government, this agent with an extraordinary mission is to reside in the convent connected with the Church of San Luigi dei Francesi, which is French property, to watch the Italian Ministry and the Deputies during the discussion; and if not a positive pressure, something like intimidation from without, it is expected, will be exercised. We shall have opportunity to see what courage this Government is capable of exhibiting, and whether the Legislature is to exercise its prerogative independent of foreign dictation. A case was carried into Court last Winter to test the question whether convent property, under the protection of other than Italian nationality, had a right to exemption in the application of a general law abolishing convents and turning the property to public uses. The decision was adverse to such exemption, and the example of France and other countries was cited, to prove that no foreign corporations, religious or other, had the right to claim the enjoyment of privileges denied to Italians themselves. The question is a very important one, regarded from more than one point of view. One aspect is that of the independence of Italian legislation without foreign interference, and the other, the course which the Hierarchy and France will be likely to pursue in case the action of Parliament is in opposition to claims set up for the security of special interests.

THE APPROACHING PARLIAMENT.

The probable moment of calling Parliament together, and whether it is best to open a new session with a royal speech, or continue the session prorogued by Sovereign decree, is still under discussion. The newspapers tell us that the Deputies' chamber has undergone alterations which will make it more convenient and pleasant to those whose duties will oblige them to pass more or less time, during a period of five or six months, within its walls. One newspaper mentions the fact that three thousand francs have been expended for a new carpet for the room, in place of one less than a year old, and adds information which proves that a certain kind of civilization has made no greater progress in Rome than at Washington. The journal says:

"The pretended reason for the removal of the old carpet, was that its color was too gloomy, and not in harmony with the color of the room! But the real reason is found in the universal national habit of spitting upon the floor, whether covered with a carpet or laid with a pavement of marble or wood. Thus the atrium, paved the last year with white and blue marble tiles, is in a deplorable state; completely stained, disfigured, covered with spit-flakes. It would be well enough to polish off this impurity, and for the future put in the corners boxes filled with saw-dust, as in the Vatican. The Pope's palace is not free from this sputage general. Foreign ladies from the North are highly scandalized to see in the Sacre Consiglio of the Cardinals spitting, from the lofty height of their seats, upon the carpet of the Presbyterium."

To this may be added that it is common to see priests before the altar, engaged in the solemn ceremony of the mass, take pinches of snuff, and spit right and left from the platform on which they stand. The subject may not be a very important one, but it has an intimate connection with the civilization of a country. Much has been done to remove from the sides of the streets the entrances of houses, and widen out-of-the-way corners, the nuisances which made the Pope's capital the by-word of foreign visitors; and there is a prospect that in time Rome will become as decent as other cities.

THE RELATIONS WITH FRANCE.

The turning of Prince Napoleon and his wife out of France is still exciting here a good deal of interest. There is a good feeling toward the Prince Napoleon among Italians, not only because the Princess Clotilde is a daughter of Victor Emmanuel, but because it is known that the cousin of the ex-Emperor does not favor in any manner the partisans of the Papacy to temporal rule, and he has given many proofs of sincere friendliness to Italy. I think the feeling or belief is growing here that, if by any of the chances of fortune, or fickle French caprice, the Bonaparte family, in the person of any of its members, should be restored to power, the interest of Italy would not be interfered with. It is the happiness of Victor Emmanuel to have children to whom the term "good" may be applied, and their fortunes are followed with affectionate solicitude by this people, whether those fortunes are cast in Spain or France.

AN ACCOUNT WITH THE VATICAN.

The journals return to the subject of the three millions and more francs which the Government makes an item of every year in trying to open an account with the Vatican. Authorized organs even assert that it is a fact that the certificate for the sum named have been prepared and printed in a style of luxury becoming to transactions with the Pope and the respectable sum now offered. But the Holy Father continues to receive the dazzling bribe which the tempter, Sella, holds out.

HEAVY RAINS.

Heavy rains have continued the past week in Middle and Northern Italy, with serious damage to railway embankments and bridges, and the traffic on several roads has been interrupted. Wide tracts of country have been exposed to inundation, and cities have barely escaped being put under water. These periodical floods are the cause of a general anxiety. It might be supposed that so narrow a tongue of land as the Italian Peninsula, with a mountain watershed supplying into two seas, might escape such a peril altogether. But most of the rivers of Italy, except the Po, are streams fed by mountain torrents, swollen to an extreme measure, with a few days of excessive rain-fall, and in the dry season running so low as to present only a naked, empty bed. Much attention has been given to the study of a system of correction of the courses, with reference to removing the evil of which certain districts are at present exposed. The Arno has embankments in many places along its course, and the Po, on account of its dikes, has the aspect of a great artificial canal. By the successful drainage of the Lake of Fucino, the Italians have shown what they are capable of accomplishing in this kind of enterprise. An area of many thousand acres, for centuries covered with water, by the persevering efforts of science, and the capital of Prince Torlonia, has been redeemed for cultivation.

THE TIDE OF TOURISTS.

The stream of travelers from the north is beginning to set in this direction, and, as might be expected, the number of Americans is in large proportion. Several of the places for foreign Protestant worship are already opened. There are prospects that three or four of them will be supported by Americans. Of some of the projects for benevolent effort set on foot here by people from the other side of the Atlantic I will speak hereafter. Meanwhile, the political intelligence every day arriving from the United States shows central attraction. The death of Mr. Seward has awakened emotion in the hearts of all Americans who love and honor their country. When we see public men prostituting their abilities to low purposes of ambition and material gain, it is good to have examples that keep alive our respect and reverent admiration. ANGELMO.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

Sanitary Condition of the City—The Public Schools and their Improvement.

The Board of Health met yesterday, President Bosworth in the chair. The Secretary presented the papers in an application for an alternative mandamus against the Board of Health at the suit of John J. Dailey and others, night scavengers, formerly licensed by the Board, but who were thrown out of business by the Board giving the monopoly of the business to the Manhattan Odorless Company. The papers were referred.

The Sanitary Committee, to whom was referred the complaints of non-compliance with order No. 9,059 in respect to the disinfection and burning of all stable-straw, &c., recommended the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That in all cases of reinspection of stables affected by order No. 9,059, if the stalls are found in a cleanly condition, with the evidences of the habitual use of disinfectants therein, such order shall be deemed as complied with.

Dr. E. H. Janes, City Sanitary Inspector, reported to the Board that three of the small-pox cases were traced to direct contagion. The number of cases for the week ending Nov. 16, 1872, was forty-three, and for the following week forty-one. The figures for the corresponding weeks this year were ten and seventeen.

Mr. Barr offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the City Sanitary Inspector be and he is hereby requested to cause a thorough inspection of all the school-houses in the City, and report all that are not in a proper sanitary condition for school purposes.

Mr. Barr said that some of the buildings are totally unfit from school purposes.

Mr. Gross, who is a Health Commissioner and a Commissioner of Public Instruction, objected to the resolution.

After some further debate, Mr. Gross withdrew his objection, and the resolution was unanimously adopted.

The Sanitary Committee presented a report of the work of the different bureaus for the week ending Nov. 23, 1872. There was a total of 1,512 inspections.

During the week vaccination has been offered to 166 families and sixty-eight vaccinations performed, of which twelve were primary and seventy-six secondary. The following is a comparative table of contagious diseases reported for the two weeks ending Nov. 23, 1872:

Nov. 16—Typhus fever, 1; typhoid fever, 19; scarlet fever, 42; measles, 4; diphtheria, 23; small-pox, 10.

Nov. 23—Typhus fever, 4; typhoid fever, 15; scarlet fever, 28; measles, 4; diphtheria, 28; small-pox, 17.

The Canteen of the Sanitary Company of Police reports the following as the amount of meat, fish, &c., seized and confiscated as unfit for human food: Cattle, 2; sheep, 6; hogs, 24; veal, "bob," 10; beef, 45 pounds; veal "cut," 20 pounds; clams, 7,000; fish, 2,100 pounds.

Change in the Board of Police—President Smith Sends in His Resignation—Mr. Manierre Appointed.

A special meeting of the Board of Police was held, yesterday, at which there were present Commissioners Bosworth, Barr, and Manierre, and Mayor Hall.

A communication was received from Mr. Henry Smith tendering his resignation as President of the Board, alleging as a reason therefor his continued ill-health, which prevented his attendance at the meetings of the Board at which his presence was of importance, owing to the making up of the estimates for 1873.

Mayor Hall stated that it was deemed by some members of the Board of Apportionment of great importance that the estimates by the several Departments of the expenses of the same for 1873 should be revised and definitely acted upon during the present week, and that the estimates of the expenses of the Police Board for street-cleaning cannot be revised without the presence of the President of the Board of Police. He therefore offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the resignation of Mr. Commissioner Henry Smith, of the office of President of the Board of Police, of the Police Department of the City of New-York, be, and the same is, hereby accepted.

Resolved, That Benjamin F. Manierre, Commissioner of Police, be, and he is hereby selected, as President of the Board of Police of the Police Department of the City of New-York, in the place of Henry Smith, resigned.

These resolutions were unanimously adopted, and Mr. Benjamin Franklin Manierre was duly installed as President of the Board of Police.

The Assault on Women in Brooklyn.

The condition of Mrs. Bradley, who was so severely beaten with a potato-masher on Monday night as No. 48 Front-street, was slightly improved yesterday, although she is by no means out of danger. Hugh Barr and his wife Rosa, together with the witness, Alice Barkey, are still in jail.

Bridget McAlpine, who was beaten on the head with a pitcher by Ellen Tierney on Tuesday at No. 163 Fulton-street, was in a very dangerous condition last evening, with but slight hopes of recovery. The assailant was yesterday held to await the result of Mrs. McAlpine's injuries, and the husband, James McAlpine, was allowed to go on parole in order that he might look after his wife and family. The examination is set down for Saturday next.

Margaret Stapleton and Mary Dilmore were yesterday held by Justice Reilly on the charge of brutally beating their aged mother, Mrs. Ellen Lowery, of Raymond and Sycamore streets.

The General Sessions Grand Jury—The Suppression of Concert Saloons and Target Companies Recommended.

Before their dismissal yesterday, the Grand Jury of the Court of General Sessions presented the following resolutions, to which Judge Bedford said he would give his attention:

Whereas, Most of the crimes now committed appear to be larcenies from the person, and robberies, and that a great number of them are committed by the followers of target companies, we recommend that the Police be requested to send a sufficient number of their force with each excursion to prevent the recurrence of these robberies.

Resolved, That jury are glad to see that the concert saloons, mentioned by their predecessors, have disappeared from the Metropolis, and have corrupted the youth of our City, have come under the severity of the law, and this jury respectfully recommend that the Police be supported by every means in this good work of purging the Metropolis.

New-York Architects and the Vienna Exposition.

A meeting of the American Institute of Architects was held yesterday afternoon at No. 113 Broadway, to take into consideration the question of sending specimens of American architecture and samples of building materials to the Vienna Exposition. Gens. Van Buren and Meyers, at the invitation of the Society, attended and explained the importance of American architecture being represented, and after some discussion a committee was appointed, consisting of Messrs. Hatfield, Putman, Box, Bistley, and Moore, to select materials and objects, and to make all necessary arrangements. It is contemplated, if any of our artists can spare a full-sized model of an American house for the Exposition.

Another of the Murderers Sentenced to Two Years' Imprisonment.

Nicholas White, indicted for the killing of James Smith, on the 21st of July last, was arraigned in General Sessions, yesterday, and his counsel offered to plead guilty to manslaughter in the third degree, and the plea was accepted. Counsel then asked for a light sentence, at the same time offering proof of the prisoner's good character and the general bad conduct of Smith, the man he killed. Judge Bedford sentenced White to two years in the State Prison.

Andre, the Wife-Murderer, Sentenced to Four Years in State Prison.

Emil André, who was found guilty of manslaughter in the third degree, on Tuesday night, for the murder of his wife Leonie, on the 13th of last June, was sentenced, yesterday, by Judge Bedford, in the Court of General Sessions, to four years' imprisonment with hard labor, being the full penalty allowed by law.

A Good Statistic.

Commissioner Van Nort's estimate of expenditures from taxation for the Department of Public Works for the year 1873 shows a reduction of $492,308 as compared with the present year; and $2,196,119 78 less than the expenditures and liabilities for the year 1872.

Laborers—Noted for the Poor, &c.

From Our Special Correspondent.

BOSTON, Tuesday, Nov. 26, 1872.

A stranger visiting this city would never be able to tell, from the faces of the people, or from the general appearance of things, that a great calamity had just befallen it. With the improved condition of the horse-car and stages have all been in full action, and the throng and bustle incident to prosperity seem rather to have increased than abated. What has been so long known as the "old Boston pride" puts life and vigor into men who might, under other circumstances, give way to despair. It is felt on all sides that the various branches of trade which centered here must not be diverted to other cities through lack of energy; and hence this admirable exhibition of pluck.

THE SHOE AND LEATHER INTERESTS.

The eagerness which the shoe and leather men have shown to maintain their prestige and keep their customers is quite remarkable. Scarcely one of the entire number burned out remains in a state of inactivity. Hanover-street has become, to some extent, like what Pearl-street was. To be sure, there is a difference in the offices and warehouses. In the new deal, the great wholesale men have no more space than their brethren, who were less extensively engaged. It is not uncommon to find firms, representing five and six large shoe factories each, hidden away in small, single rooms. The desire to begin operations was so strong that every person seems to have taken the best to be had, with the resolution to put up with any amount of inconvenience rather than remain idle. In this connection we have not illustration of the old proverb: "It's an ill wind that blows nobody any good." The owners of old houses in Hanover-street, and the streets in the immediate vicinity, are to be considerable gainers by the fire. They have just let their offices at more than twice the rent that could be obtained for them three weeks ago. A great many of the shoe and leather men having had their books destroyed, are now sending out circular to their customers, with the view of having the items of account furnished. Several of them have to depend entirely on this method to get their business into decent shape. They have scarcely any way of checking the statements as they come in, so that those who wish to take advantage of the opportunity for unfair dealing will have comparatively nothing to prevent them from so doing.

RESUMPTION OF BUSINESS.

In talking with men engaged in other lines of business, who were also burnt out, I find that they have as strong a desire to resume as the shoe and leather men. Prominent among these are the wool merchants. They have also taken small rooms wherever they could get them in the neighborhood of the burnt district, and have their shingles out and their samples displayed. The firms who gave most employment to women are making arrangements for a speedy resumption. Indeed, some of them have already resumed, and others are nearly ready to do likewise. In a few instances I have encountered persons who might have taken advantage of the fire to retire from business altogether, but for the claims made upon them by their old employes, most of whom would, in such an event, be left without means of support for their families during the Winter.

THE BURNT DISTRICT.

The openings to the several streets burnt over are still guarded by United States soldiers, who allow no person to pass them without permits. This judicious precaution has been of much service in keeping off the crowd of sight-seers, and permitting owners of property to work without hindrance. Most of the walls have been taken down, the streets have all been cleared of rubbish, and everything of a dangerous nature removed. Wherever the condition of the debris would permit it, temporary buildings of wood and sheet-iron have been erected for immediate occupation. Down toward the docks quite a number of these are in process of construction, and will be ready for use by the end of this week. For the present, as a matter of course, nothing of a permanent kind will be attempted, as it is not yet known, to what extent changes may be made in the streets. There is a very strong feeling in favor of doing away with all the crooked streets and places in the rebuilding. Pearl-street, which before ran from Milk to Broad, will, by absorbing Bath-street, probably be extended to Water-street. The other streets, similarly situated, will doubtless be improved in the same way.

INCREASE OF EMPLOYMENT.

In the rebuilding of the burned district a vast amount of employment will be provided for persons who are usually very badly off in the Winter season, and have to be maintained in some measure at the public expense. Laboring men who gather into large cities like New-York and Boston have, particularly during late years, been almost driven to the brink of starvation each Winter. They will have plenty to do here for a few months in clearing away the rubbish. The charitable societies can afford to be liberal in giving to the poor women who have been thrown out of employment, for they are not likely to be much troubled by the laborers' wives. Stone-masons, brick-layers, roofers, and carpenters have also a fine prospect for making good wages, and will, no doubt, avail of it to improve and strengthen their societies.

RELIEF OF THE SUFFERERS.

The ladies have undertaken the greater part of the relief work. Thus far they have left nothing undone to prevent destitution, but it is quite evident to a disinterested observer that much more could be done—that is to say, much more of a substantial character—if less pride had been shown in dealing with the generous offers of assistance from other cities. It is true that there is here none of the suffering which added to the horrors of the Portland and Chicago great fires. There are no houseless and homeless ones to be sheltered in wooden sheds and tents; but for all that there is a good deal of poverty, and that, too, of a kind not to be relieved by a few small gifts of money and food. The rich people have taken it upon themselves to provide for the poor, and they are doing it pretty effectively, although, as before stated, it would have been better had they consented to allow the benevolent elsewhere to share the burden with them.

THE FIRE AND THE THEATRES.

The theatres are kept running as usual, although the attendance is nothing like what it was before the fire. The people smile and keep up a reasonable appearance of courage during the business hours of the day, but they stay at home in the evening instead of going to places of amusement. What are known as the fashionable theatres are the most thinly attended. Such sterling artists as Mr. Dion Boucicault are playing here just now to half-filled houses, and may continue to do so for a few weeks to come. In the present unsettled condition of business it would be hard to expect a different condition of affairs, and although the managers and the "star" actors have reason to be gloomy, it is but justice to them to say that they are doing their utmost to look cheerful, and to refrain from making complaints. G. H. B.

Recovery of Bodies from the Ruins of the Boston Fire.

BOSTON, Nov. 27.—Nine bodies have been recovered from the ruins of the fire, and five of them identified. The bodies of nineteen persons, supposed to be buried in the ruins, are still missing.

Contributions to the Harvard College fund now amount to $105,000.

A Recent Stage Robbery—Suspicious of Collusion.

From the Sacramento (Cal.) Union, Nov. 15.

On Thursday last, in the County Court of Amador, before Judge Gwinlin, commenced the trial of John Boardman, indicted for the crime of robbery, alleged to have been committed on the 1st day of May, 1872, by stopping two stages near Volcano, and taking therefrom about $200 in coin and two gold bars of the value of $6,576, the property of Wells, Fargo & Co. Distinguished Attorney-Beings appeared for the people, [illegible]

BAZAINE'S TRIAL.

[illegible] the "Remarkable Peculiarities" [illegible] Vacantlier (Nov. 11) Correspondence of the London Daily Telegraph.

It now appears that Marshal Bazaine will be tried not merely for failing to do his duty as Commander of the Army at Metz, but also for high treason against the French Republic—in having attempted to negotiate with the enemy in the name of the Emperor, who had been dethroned no longer the Sovereign of France, and having made overtures to the Emperor, as Regent of France, to sell better terms than the German military authorities offered to the garrison. In a word, he is to be accused of having, in his capacity of supreme military authority at the head of a large army, ignored the existence of the Republic of the 4th of September, and acted as if he had been from the 15th of September—the date when he is alleged to have become cognizant of the change of Government—to the 27th of October—the date of the capitulation of Metz—under the command of Napoleon III., not under that of the Republic. The charges are not yet drawn out, nor will they be until the last moment. But some person or other connected with the getting up of the "Instruction" has "let the cat out of the bag;" and the reason why, so much time has been consumed in getting up the evidence against the prisoner is now patent, although the fact is yet known only to a very few persons outside the official ring. After all, it is nothing more than fair that, in a country where so many men have prospered from having broken the oaths they have taken to Kings, Republics and Emperors, one who, like Bazaine, remained faithful to his salt, should be punished for his presumption in daring to differ from his fellows.

The military part of the "Instruction" has, I am assured on good authority, broken down altogether. Of twenty-three "sworn or honest" witnesses, there has been enough to suffice for a Court-martial that would last a couple of years. The documents in the case half fill a moderately-sized dining-room of a house near the railway bridge that has been hired for the purpose. But, as yet—though Gen. Rivière and his assistants have been at it nearly seven months at the work—it is affirmed that nothing tangible or definite enough upon which to found the charges has been made out. One fact, however, became plainer and plainer as the questioning and cross-questioning went on—namely, that if Bazaine had to be found guilty of not doing his duty at Metz, there would be some twelve or fourteen Generals of the French Army—including Marshal Canrobert himself—who would have to be tried upon charges much akin to those laid at the door of the Marshal Commanding-in-Chief. Now, when nearly all these officers hold high commands—one is Governor of Paris; another commands the corps d'armée now in the capital; a third holds a like command at Lyons; a fourth is Minister of War, and so on—it would, to say the least, not be little inconvenient to make prisoners of men in these positions, and get up cases against them in the method adopted with respect to Bazaine. One military cause célèbre is all very well, but half a dozen such trials would be too much even for Frenchmen to enjoy. These are some of the reasons why the "Instruction" in the case is considered likely to form comparatively an unimportant element in this great trial. Gen. Rivière has sent one or two officers to the environs of Metz, there to pick up any evidence that is can be found of the Marshal's having sent letters to the Prussian authorities before he capitulated; but nothing has come to light that could in any way tend to condemn the prisoner. There are almost some wonderful stories of the Marshal's having actually been seen at a certain chateau not far from Metz, within the German lines; and some of the people in the neighborhood positively affirm that they saw him more than one conference with Prince Frederick Charles. But no sooner are the witnesses sent for and questioned, than it turns out that, although thoroughly convinced of what they say, they merely repeat what they have been told; and when the original tellers are interrogated, their evidence proves to be also hearsay.

But to the mission which Marshal Bazaine confided to Gen. Boyer, who was sent from Metz to see the Empress in England, and try to make her negotiate with the Germans, there is something tangible. There can be little doubt that Bazaine considered the oath of fidelity he had taken to the Emperor not binding upon him through evil and through good report, and that until he surrendered Metz he regarded Napoleon III. as the Sovereign whom he ought to obey. In the eyes of those who have more enlarged ideas about oaths this is a crime of the highest magnitude. But with Bazaine, by not being a traitor to his Sovereign, became a traitor to the French Republic.

The Ex-Irish Attorney-General.

From the London Spectator.

The House of Commons will miss Mr. Dowse, and even the Irish Bench will hardly gain the whole of him. The Bench is not the place for humor—not the place, at least, for humor of Mr. Sergeant Dowse's kind. It is very possible for humorists of the Westbury type to drop vitriol from the benches of the Chancery Courts on "the Judge of the Court below" with the best possible literary effect; but Judges of the Courts of Common Law, who have to sum up civil and criminal cases and pronounce sentence on criminals, have but few opportunities of using publicly a faculty of humor with decorum and good results. If an English House of Commons ever loses all its humorists, it will alternate between the dullest and most captious moods. It has not lost all its humorists yet. But, for all that, it will sadly miss Mr. Sergeant Dowse, whose humor was of a more pleasing and enjoyable kind, and more of it than jaunting in it, and, more of spontaneous mirth than that of any of the humorists now left there. When he first entered the House, Mr. Sergeant Dowse, whose shrewd voice, Socratic face, exceedingly portly form, and rich brogue, at once attracted universal attention, was in early opportunity of announcing notice to the grievances of Derry against one of the city companies which holds property in that neighborhood—the Irish Society, and, looking down with a sort of comic perplexity at his own not inconsiderable person, declared himself "an unchaste, corpulent, and bloated member of the Irish Society." The House was conquered in a moment. That a complaint should have become incarnate in that stout Irish Allegro was a conception so grotesque as to give assurance of a constant supply of fun for the term of Mr. Sergeant Dowse's seat in that House. It was a joke as different in kind from Mr. Beresford Osborne's conventional critical claims about members of "broad beam," who find the benches of the House of Commons too narrow for them, as humor is from jocularity, and yet jocularity is a thing to be grateful for, and for which the House is often superfluously grateful in many a weary debate. And the promise of Mr. Sergeant Dowse's first introduction of himself to the House was fully kept. Even the dull land debates were often rendered vivid by his droll retorts, as when, with an air of cheery condolence, he told one member, who depressingly described a thirty-one years' lease as "just thirty-one years' notice to quit," that he supposed the honorable member felt no thankfulness for his life, on the ground that it might be described, on the authority of the Psalmist, as "a seventy years' notice to quit;" or when, he remarked quaintly on Dr. Ball's ostentatious despair that the House, after robbing Ireland of her Church, was now going to rob her of "her poor tenants;" or when he sympathized cordially with Mr. Henley's wrath against the tenant farmers who burnt the fox-lairs and covert-coverts, and said that "the fox has as good a right to live to be hunted as any other animal"—such an animal, for example, as the tenant-farmer himself. Behind all these strokes of humor there was, however, the solid sense of a good debater. But when the Irish Attorney-General replied last session to the English Attorney-General on the Woman's Suffrage question, he for once allowed himself more latitude, gave himself fairly up to the spirit of extravagance, and said anything and everything with which the spirit of true mirth inspired him. Sir John Coleridge was, as usual, liquidly eloquent, fluent, picturesque, persuasive, and dignified, if not precisely majestic. In reply to him arose the Irish Attorney-General, and with the air of a man brimming over with inward laughter, declared that he had listened to the speech of his "honorable and learned friend the Attorney-General, because it was so easy to answer it." This delicously Irish transposition of the natural order of phenomena—which had its wit, too, for it assumed an à priori knowledge of the nature of Sir John Coleridge's speech, to which his Irish colleague had not his ear only out of pure prophesy that he could reply to it—gave the House a sense of positive rapture, not the less delightful for its contrast to the decorous flow of the bland accents which had so lately ceased. Then Mr. Sergeant Dowse went on to admit to the full the literary brilliance of Queen Anne's time, but declared that he could not see how it was owing to the fact "Queen Anne was a woman." (Sir J. Coleridge did not precisely say it was, but he certainly implied that a woman on the throne, if she had been a very bad ruler, might have prevented it—as that there was a fair hit at the substance of the remark as well as excellent fun in its form.) He then went on gravely to assure the Attorney-General that "the Augustan age of English literature derived its name, not from a woman named Augusta, but from one named Augustus, who was then on the throne." Coarse Augustus—which as a bit of humorous raillery directed against the meliflouous historic lore of Sir J. D. Coleridge has rarely been surpassed in the House of Commons. A man who has strength, humor, and, we may even say, eloquence, enough to turn what, otherwise, would be a simple jeu d'esprit into a social power, as Mr. Sergeant Dowse certainly did in the House of Commons, with outdoing anything of an more sound style of legal acumen and political sagacity, is one to be regretted as well as missed. Parliamentary ways are not altogether ways of pleasantness, and the elegant grotesque figure among the lawyers was bad as much local strength to him as it was to a very serious loss to a House that has lost a good many of its humorists.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Those Who Attempted to Vote, and How They Were Treated.

The question of woman's political position is gradually becoming an important one. For twenty years past certain reformers have claimed that justice demanded that the ballot should be given to women on equal terms with men; but this agitation has been merely sentimental until recent events have given it some interest.

All State Constitutions say that only "male citizens over twenty-one years of age" can vote. Believing that the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments gave them the right to do so, women in five States have attempted to vote, and have been treated in a variety of ways. They have been refused permission to register or vote; they have been permitted to register, and refused permission to vote; they have been given the oath of citizenship, and then denied registration, and, finally, they have been permitted both to register and to vote. In no two instances have they been treated alike.

Beginning with the extreme negative in Missouri, Mrs. Virginia Minor, of St. Louis, made application to have her name enrolled as a voter, and was refused; she now brings suit against the officers of registration, and lays her damages at $10,000.

In Connecticut, at Hartford, Mrs. Hooker and Miss Burr were permitted by the Selectmen to register, but were peremptorily rejected at voting time. In this instance Mrs. Hooker's husband was given the oath of citizenship by the Selectmen, but when she applied for registration was refused. Thereupon she made application to the local Judge to enforce her claims upon the officers of election; but the case was decided against her, whereupon she appealed to the Supreme Court of the State.

In Michigan, Mrs. Manette B. Gardner, of Detroit, was two years ago allowed to register and to vote. This Fall, on application, she was again permitted to register, but when she appeared to cast her ballot she was refused.

In Oregon Mrs. A. J. Dunniway and three other ladies were permitted to register and vote, but their ballots were received under protest, and, according to one account, afterward thrown out.

In New-York a year ago, Mrs. L. D. Mansfield and other ladies were allowed to register and vote at Nyack, and no evil results followed; while in this City several women applied for registration and were refused. This year Miss Anthony and fourteen other ladies have registered and voted in Rochester, but now, it is said, that they and the officers of election are arrested and held to answer for illegal voting, or permitting the same.

The Wrecked Assyria—Statement of Capt. Blanche.

Yesterday, the Captain and crew of the ship Assyria, water-logged and abandoned at sea, who had been rescued by the steam-ship Baltic, of the White Star line, appeared before the British Consul, Mr. Archibald, and registered their names. The ship's company consisted of Capt. Theodore Blanche, John Irwin, first mate; Wm. White, second mate, and Adam Davidson, Francis McDonald, David Hamilton, John Nelson, John Johnson, A. Francis, Albert Bayer, John Anderson, John Hill, Oliver Tate, Thomas Emerson, C. McLachlan, Carl Carson, Landler McInnis, seamen, and James Duncan, ship's boy. William Atkins, who had his arm broken, was sent to the hospital, and the rest of the crew, who were entirely destitute, were provided with quarters at the Sailors' Home, in Cherry-street, where they will be kept until they obtain ships. The passage of those who desire to return home will be paid by the Consul, by whom each man has been supplied with a complete outfit. They express themselves as extremely grateful for the kind treatment extended to them by Capt. Kennedy and officers of the Baltic.

The following is the protest of Capt. Blanche, presented, in accordance with law, to the Consul for the purpose of securing the insurance on the vessel:

The Assyria left Quebec on the 8th inst., laden with timber, for Queenstown, Ireland, and prosecuted her voyage with varied winds and weather, but without anything having occurred worthy of particular mention until the 17th inst. In the evening a fresh breeze sprung up, which rapidly increased to a gale with heavy snow squalls, and, notwithstanding that the sails were bended and those that were still set closely reefed, the cross-jack yard was carried away in the night, at 2 o'clock. The sails were soon blown away and the ship allowed to run before the wind. The storm continued to rage during the night, and toward morning had increased to a hurricane, with a tremendous ocean sea. At daylight, the main-mast, with the ship on the starboard, and rendered her completely unmanageable. The speaker closely reefed was set to enable the ship to be steered, but it did not last more than ten minutes before it was blown to ribbons. Then the real troubles of the crew commenced, the waves dashing with unceasing fury over the doomed vessel, and tearing away everything that was not firmly lashed from the decks. At that moment the fore-mast, bearing destruction in its mighty breast, struck the ship on the starboard bow, carried away the cut-water and cut head, opened the ship at the wood sude, along the stem, and tore away the bow-sprit and all timbers, so that the cargo in the hold was visible. All hands went to work at the pumps, but without being able to keep down the water, which rose rapidly in the hold. The ship lay broadside to the seas, and the waves continuing to wash overboard, the boats and everything movable were torn away. The boatswain, William White, and carpenter, Frank Anderson, were carried over the bulwarks, and with great difficulty the former was rescued. Nothing more was seen of the carpenter. The same sea washed everything from the cabin. About noon the hold was full of water, but continuous work at the pumps still working, when it was discovered that the ship was settling fast. An hour later a heavy sea struck the ship and tore away all the stanchions and gooseneck-boards from the stern, right to the mizzen rigging, and caused the ship to fill at once, the sea meanwhile making a complete breach over the vessel. The crew were now compelled to climb into the rigging in order to escape from the waves, which were terrifically breaking and dashing with prodigious fury over the hull. They clung to the spars to which they had lashed themselves for two days, when, at length the main-mast gave way, and, fortunately, the main-mast was found to have settled down about two feet, and the main-topmast was cut down. About 10 o'clock on the morning of the 20th inst. a vessel hove in sight, which proved to be the steamship Baltic, of Liverpool. She sent her own boats and, having with difficulty rescued the wrecked crew, carried them to New-York.

The vessel was owned by W. Harrison & Co., of New-Castle-upon-Tyne, and was of 1,287 tons Custom-house measurement.

Interesting Decision in the United States District Court—A Question of Admiralty Law.

James Murray and George E. Holyoke, in December, 1869, filed a libel in the United States District Court against the schooner Ocean Bells, of which they allege that they own five-sixteenths. There had been disagreements among the owners. The libelants claimed that through bad management the value of the vessel had depreciated; that she was controlled by parties having only a nominal interest in her; that from year to year she had lost money, and that, to brief, her management and condition generally was unmanageable and bad. The libel prays for a decree that the vessel be sold for the benefit of her creditors and owners, and that until such rule the libelants be given possession of the vessel, they offering to give bonds for her prudent management.

Judge Blatchford, yesterday, rendered a decision that the Court had no power to order a sale of the vessel on the facts set out in the libel, on the demand of the owners of five-sixteenths against the will of the owners of the rest, except, perhaps, as the result of a failure of the owners of the eleven-sixteenths to give security for the safe return of the vessel. Such power of sale has never been established in this country.

The libel does not ask for security for the safe return of the vessel, nor has it any prayer for general relief, and the libel will be dismissed unless the libelants shall apply for leave to amend their libel so as to make it one praying for security for the safe return of the vessel.

The Grand Jury and the Charitable Institutions.

The Grand Jury, which was discharged by Judge Bedford yesterday, failed to carry out their intention to visit the institutions under the care of the Commissioners of Charities and Correction. Thus they had before them the charges of Dr. Echeverria against the Commissioners, contained in his report relative to the Insane Asylum, that these were laid over and will be placed before the Grand Jury, which will probably be impaneled next week, there is no reason to doubt. From a conversation which a TIMES reporter had with Commissioner Bowen, yesterday, it appears that the Institutions are visited by the Grand Jury three or four times a year. The Commissioners are always notified in advance of their intended visit, in order, it was explained, that a boat may be got ready for them. But boats to Blackwell's, Ward's, and Hart's Islands run regularly from the Battery and Twenty-second-street East River, and by them the Grand Jury always go. Whatever purpose this notification may serve, it certainly gives the Commissioners an opportunity to put everything in order for the day, and so hide whatever they do not wish to come to light. The last visit the Grand Jury made was in October of the [illegible]

ENGLISH NOTES.

British Finance, Trade and Amusements.

Money and Business—Winter Prospects—Theatres and Taverns—Metropolitan Pleasures—New Plays.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Nov. 9, 1872.

The minimum discount rate of the Bank of England is now at six per cent., but practically it is nearer seven, and the outside market keeps pace with the rise. It is expected, therefore, that the Bank rate will next week be made to correspond more closely with the actual state of the money market. A good deal of alarm is felt at the continued drain of gold from this country to Germany and elsewhere, and also at the possibility of a sudden and violent reaction in the event of the German Government allowing their hoarded stores of gold to pass into general circulation. The Economist announces, apparently on good authority, that the German Government has adopted a policy which will guard against this danger. It is said to be issuing gold only in the extent of supplying the wants of bankers who have to keep a good stock of bullion in reserve. Apart from purely financial difficulties, there is some reasonable uneasiness here as to the state of trade. The official returns for October show that while there was a decrease in imports—chiefly in cotton and wool, and perhaps to be explained as regards the former by the early arrival of Indian supplies by the Suez Canal—there was also a continued decrease in the quantity of exports, although their money value is fully maintained. In point of fact, therefore, there is a decline in the actual amount of trade transacted by this country. High prices have already checked consumption, and it may be assumed that they have reached their limit. The next thing will naturally be a fall of prices, but it does not follow that this will immediately restore consumption to its former level. It is quite on the cards that before the end of the year there will be a decrease in value as well as quantities. It can hardly be doubted that the sudden and general rise of prices of almost all kinds of goods was in a great measure artificial and temporary. Labor was dearer, and manufacturers having to raise their prices so as to cover the increased cost of labor, thought they might as well try how far they could go in this direction on their own account. The answer is probably not very agreeable to them. They have made large profits for the moment, but at the expense of a decrease of consumption, which may not be soon recovered. It is dangerous to encourage customers to exercise their ingenuity in reducing their wants, and making the most of their supplies. The most dangerous element in the situation is this—that the general rise in the rate of wages has been accompanied by a general rise of prices, and that the former will be broken down more rapidly than the latter. Capitalists can endure fluctuations by spreading them over a certain period, and drawing on their accumulations; but the laboring classes have no margin to draw upon. They live from hand to mouth. What they earn they spend, and the recent increase of wages simply means that they have become accustomed to a standard of living—more meat, and especially more drink—any change in which for the worse will be bitterly resented. Under these circumstances, a sharp Winter will be very trying

CENTRAL PARK.

Progress of the Work of Improvement Now Being Prosecuted.

What the Present Management is Doing—Active Work Going On in Every Direction.

The work now in progress in Central Park, and on the various small parks of the City, is of two kinds—permanent improvements, in accordance with the original designs, and the restoration or repair of objects which either owed their origin to the Ring management or were altered and spoiled by it.

The Art and Natural History Museums are among the works of the former gang. The places of these have been too often described to call for any repetition here. The Art Museum will be situated on the side of the Park near Fifth-avenue, and the ground for the foundations of the building was broken last week. The work of excavation will be continued during the Winter, and such other work done as the weather will permit. The Museum of Natural History will be erected on the west of the Park, between Seventy-seventh and Eighty-first streets and Eighth and Ninth avenues, on the ground known as Manhattan-square. Both these institutions will rank among the best of their kind in the world, and must play an important part in the scheme of public education.

The work of preparing the ground for building operations is rapidly proceeding. Much of the wide space which makes Manhattan-square is extremely rocky and irregular, and gangs of men are now actively engaged in blasting and leveling. It is probable the surface will be prepared, and the foundations of the building commenced in the Spring.

A Zoological Garden will be added to the Park, but the plans for this are not yet matured. The location has not been decided on, and for the present such animals as are committed for exhibition to the Park Commissioners will be accommodated in or around the old Arsenal Building. It is proposed by the Board of the Zoological Department fully up to the standard of the other institutions of the Park.

At Eighty-fifth-street a row of workshops have been erected, and are now nearly complete, which will greatly economize the labor and increase the efficiency of what may be called the "furniture" of the Park, as arbors, seats, benches, &c. The shops open on the sunken road, and the upper story rises but slightly over the line of the reservoir, against the end of which they are built. They are, therefore, almost entirely concealed from view, while excellently situated for convenience. The building contains shops for painters, carpenters, wheelwrights, and blacksmiths; they are supplied with machinery and will be warmed by steam. The work of building was commenced under the Ring management, and is cited as a characteristic of time misnomination that the foundation was laid so late in the Fall that the frost loosened all the stone, and every foot of it had to be taken out in the Spring and the work commenced again.

The conspicuous wooden structure placed beside the Belvidere at the Reservoir was removed and used probably at Mount Morris Park. The Belvidere tower is seen in a direct line north, when the visitor is standing on the Mall. It was intended that this was all that should appear of the structure. But Judge Hilton was not satisfied with the sight of the ugly, ill-shaped, painted contrivance beside the gray stone tower. This wooden structure is now more conspicuous than the tower, and is so heavy that the wall which supports it on the south side has been so much shaken by its vibrations that it will have to be strengthened or entirely rebuilt.

The building called the "Sheep-fold" is too bulky for removal. The Park Commissioners recently passed a resolution calling for a report as to whether it could be used for an aquarium, and the subject is now under investigation by the engineer in charge of the Department. Something will no doubt be done to the Sprite to tone down the too conspicuous color of the building, or screen it in some measure by planting trees around or training vines over it.

The paths around the Dairy are in process of restoration, in accordance with the original design, which for the sake of keeping this building as much in observation as possible. The ground has been staked out for the alteration of the walks, and the caps made in the fortifications around it will be replanted at a favorable season.

The Deer-house which was in course of erection on the south side of the Mall at 59th-st. has been entirely removed, and the materials stored away for future use. Nearly 100,000 plants have been imported and set out. A large consignment of ferns, &c., arrived from Holland last week, and more are to come.

The foundations of the great Conservatory were laid, under the old administration, at a point near Seventy-third-street and Fifth-avenue. The pond in front of it has been embanked, and finished with a stone wall on the side nearest the intended building. The plan of the building, however, has been modified, and were considerably perplexed by the alterations which Judge Hilton had caused to be made in the foundation, as he intended to put up something totally different to what had been contemplated. When the building is complete, it will have a lower dome than that which the Park concerts will take place during the Winter and in wet weather. The hall will be properly warmed and lighted, and will probably be adorned with statuary and paintings. The Conservatory proper will be above it, and two pavilions at either end will also be used for plants.

The fountain which had been commenced between Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth streets, on Fifth-avenue, has been done away with and the stones removed to Washington-square, to be used in the construction of a fountain there. Work on the fountain on the Terrace is progressing, and sculptors are now engaged on the bronze portions of the structure.

The present Meteorological Observatory of the Park is in the Arsenal Building. It has been proposed to use the Belvidere as an observatory. Another suggestion, which meets with more favor, is that a tower should be built on the Great Hill at the north end of the Park, and to make it one of the best and most complete in the country.

The wall around the Park is in rapid process of completion. Along the line of Eighth-avenue a large force of masons is at work, and the whole will be finished before Spring.

The Accident to the Idaho and How it Was Reported—A Ship-Carpenter Fills a Wooden Cylinder-Head on the Engine.

From the San Francisco Chronicle.

On a late trip of the steam-ship Nebraska from New-Zealand to Honolulu, the carpenter of the ship became engaged in a spicy debate with the English steward aboard as to the responsibility of England for the destruction of the United States merchant marine by the Alabama. The debate terminated in a fight, and the two combatants were placed in irons. Upon the arrival of the Nebraska at Honolulu the carpenter told his grievances to the American Consul, who thought best to send him back to the United States on the Idaho.

When the Idaho was several days out on the return voyage from Honolulu, her cylinder-head was broken into fragments, and the engine could not be used. She had just reached a point where the trade-winds failed her; her sails were scarcely large enough to steady her in rough weather, and retarded as she was by her propeller, the chances for getting to San Francisco, or even back to Honolulu, were rather blue. In an ordinary breeze her sails just save her headway enough to be steered, and as few vessels cross or follow the Sandwich Island steam-ship route, the passengers resigned themselves to fate, and made up their minds to endure a long and uncertain float. The Captain was about to be positioned to put passengers and crew on short allowance, when the bellicose carpenter came to their rescue.

On examining the injured cylinder, the thought entered his mind that a stout cylinder-head of tough, hard wood might stand a sufficient pressure of the steam to run the ship at a moderate speed. He stated this to the Captain, who, after some hesitation and as a last resort, reluctantly gave him permission to try the experiment. The carpenter procured his tool-chest from the hold, and after twenty-five hours hard work finished and inserted the wooden cylinder-head. It was made of three thicknesses of hard teak board, rendered steam-proof by being covered with paint and canvas, and was called tight and held in its place by bolts, as is other cylinder-heads, and by a piece of timber braced against its ends. When the carpenter announced that the engine was ready for use, and desired the engineer to turn on steam, there was a general scamper from the cylinder, where members of the passengers, officers, and firemen, and seriously watched the finishing of the work. Slowly the steam was turned on, the disturbed rods and fall, the propeller churned the water quickly, the Idaho moved on at her accustomed speed, and the wooden head was a success. The cylinder-head, after being used for a time, swelled and collapsed like the lungs in respiration, but the invention stood the test to the end, and earned for the carpenter quite a reputation. He is now employed on the Ajax, and has become a very hero among sea-going men.

The North-Western "Corner."

Mr. Lanequin, counsel for the Erie Railroad Company in the suit against Gould, yesterday, appeared before Judge Fancher, in Supreme Court, Chambers, and obtained an order returnable on Tuesday next, directing Gould's counsel to show cause why the ex parte injunction granted, appointing a receiver to examine William R. Travers, should not be vacated, as having been improvidently granted.

In the same litigation, an order was obtained, at the instance of Gould's lawyers, from Judge Fancher, for the examination of S. B. H. Barlow, one of the counsel for the Erie Company.

Encounter with a Bear—Singular Conduct of a Cretaceous.

From the San Francisco Bulletin, Nov. 19.

A gentleman who arrived a few days ago from the lower country, where grizzly bears help the herders to take care of the sheep, relates a curious bear adventure which occurred to an Indian herdsman in his employ. He sent the man to a distant portion of a large ranch to look after a herd of sheep. The Indian at night-fall set under a shed with a roof of branches, but open on all sides, and lay down in his blankets. After a few hours sleep, he was awakened by feeling the hot breath of some animal on his face. He moved his arms, and at once understood the situation—a bear was sniffing at him. The man, with great presence of mind, determined to keep perfectly still, for he knew if he moved or cried out, one blow of those huge paws would break his skull like a walnut. Brum scratched off the blankets and seized the Indian by the leg. Though suffering terribly, the brave fellow did not allow a groan or cry to escape him. The bear dragged him from the bed for some distance, and then commenced to dig a hole to lay the Indian in and cover him up from the coyotes. After the grave had been dug deep enough, the bear, contenting himself with about a pound of flesh from the victim's thigh, moved the body to the hole and covered it up. The Indian managed to keep the earth over his face loose enough to allow him to breathe, and when the bear retired he crawled out toward the mustang, which was picketed some yards outside the hut. With great difficulty he mounted, and then rode toward the ranch-house. A doctor was sent for, and pronounced the wounds, though severe and painful, not likely to prove fatal. The next day a medicine-man arrived, and the grizzly was killed in the neighborhood of the spot where he had stowed away his intended meal.

MARKETS BY TELEGRAPH.

BUFFALO, Nov. 27.—Cattle—The receipts today, including 22 cars reported for sale, were 2,70 head, making the total supply for the week thus far 8,220 head, or 370 cars, against 275 cars for the same time last week. The market was slow at 4c. decline on medium and common Cattle, and 10c. on good, from last week's closing rates, buyers not being disposed to hold their purchases over the holiday. The run was generally of inferior quality. UNDERWOOD'S AMERICAN AUTHORS HAND-BOOK OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. Intended for the use of High Schools, as well as a companion and guide for Private Students and for General Readers. (American Authors.) By F. H. Underwood, A.M. Crown 8vo, Cloth. Price $2 00. A companion volume to which received the heartiest commendations from all quarters, for the clear, accurate and concise summary of the characteristics of British Authors.

Encouraged by the success of that work, the author has given more space, in the present volume, to the critical and biographical notices; and the publishers believe that, considering their small compass and the concise style, rendered necessary by the plan of the work, no such sharp, faithful, fearless, yet kindly sketches of American Authors have ever appeared in any form; and that none have been more happily expressed.

Democratic papers all over the country are proving true to their instincts, and derive a delusive comfort, by assertions that Gen. GRANT has been elected by the negro vote exclusively. Borrowing, for this occasion only, the wonderful arithmetic of the World, they assert that as his popular majority is only about seven hundred thousand, and the negro vote is certainly eight hundred thousand, he cannot possibly have a majority of the whites. It is wholly immaterial whether he has or not, but since they are so determined to make a point of this, perhaps they can reconcile with their theory the fact that the heaviest majorities for the President are in such States as New-York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Maine, Michigan, Ohio, and other States which have a very small colored population. In fact, Gen. GRANT has a vote in excess of that of Mr. GREELEY in the States having relatively few negro votes, sufficient to account for nearly the whole of his popular majority. It is very distressing for the Democrats, but they have reached such an extremity that while they have no longer a white man's party, they cannot resist the temptation to insult and repel the colored vote.

Delaware having become Republican, ought to abolish the pillory and whipping-post, which yet remain as a reproach upon the civilization of the State. There was a disgraceful exhibition recently at New-Castle, when eight men were subjected to these punishments, which can be safely said to have had no other effect than to brutalize the spectators, many of whom were women and children. The enlightened sense of our age has condemned all public infliction of corporeal punishment, as not only inhuman, but as unwise, to the extent that it has no deterring influence upon crime. As Delaware is about to pass into a new and brighter era, we hope the State will speedily sweep away the relics of a barbarism that everywhere else in the land have been wholly obliterated.

Disregard of public sentiment upon the part of officials has seldom been so flagrant as in the appointment yesterday of BENJAMIN F. MANIERRE as President of the Board of Police, upon the motion of Mayor HALL. Having earned the confidence of Tammany as a Police Commissioner, MANIERRE would have avoided further prominence if he had the slightest idea of what the people meant in the recent decision at the polls. It is a striking proof of the urgent need of complete reform in City affairs, that, at this late day, such a man as MANIERRE can be chosen to a place so responsible as the head of the Police Department, and has the effrontery to accept it.

It may be that Commodore VANDERBILT intends, by the changes he is carrying out along the line of his railroad in Fourth-avenue, to abate the nuisances which have been the cause of so much just complaint, but the account of his "improvements" which we publish this morning shows that he is making very little progress in that direction. Thus far, he has succeeded in proving his intention to take an area in Fourth-avenue northward from the Grand Central Depot, five blocks in length wholly for the use of his railroads, but he has not in any way diminished the noise or danger from his constantly-passing trains. The bridges he is building over his tracks at several streets promise to be unsightly and inconvenient. Upon the whole, we cannot see that much has been gained thus far by the agitation of last year, and public attention is again being turned to the solution of the problem of how these trains are to get in and out of the City without risk or annoyance to our citizens. It must be speedily solved in some way.

Thanksgiving.

The proclamations of the President and the Governor, appointing today as one of thanksgiving, have pointed out the general reasons for its observance. Few, we trust, will dispute their force. But there are some matters which neither President GRANT nor Gov. HOFFMAN could touch upon, that, nevertheless, may possibly be remembered today by patriotic Americans, in the calm period which intervenes between the arrival of his morning newspaper and the summons to roast turkey. Chief among these is the fact that our country never before was apparently so secure from the dangers which threaten a great republic. For the first time in twelve years, Thanksgiving Day dawns on our nation substantially and permanently agreed in regard to the legal and rightful equality of all its citizens. For the first time in that long and trying period, there is no considerable party that questions the provisions of the national Constitution which secure that equality, or either hopes or wishes to change them. For the first time our people have a republic in spirit and in fact, as in name. It is not easy, perhaps, for even the most philosophic of persons, with a definite consciousness of an unusually good dinner in the immediate future, to dwell with enthusiasm on a point in which his personal interest is or may be remote; but those who have shared in the tedious struggle by which this result has been attained, and those who have felt that this struggle had first to be ended before the country could attend to matters intimately concerning its prosperity and its reputation, will not object to the intrusion of the subject.

And surely all New-Yorkers may reasonably be thankful that the community to which they belong has shown itself able to overturn an odious and disgraceful despotism of corruption, and assume the control of its own affairs by honest and respectable agents. Many of our readers will look back on the work which last Thanksgiving Day saw vigorously commenced, and which today sees fairly in the way of completion, with a glow of sincere satisfaction, and thank Heaven with heartiness that they and their guests are no longer the prey of a vulgar band of public marauders.

But, after all, we shall not be bold enough to suppose that gratitude for these general blessings will go far toward kindling that gentle warmth of heart with which we hope all our friends will sit down to their own or some one else's hospitable board today. If we are going to be very full of good-feeling before our good cheer, it will have to be because our individual affairs have gone reasonably well, and no great obstacle of personal discontent lies in the way of common pleasure. For such a happy state of things with each and all we can only express our cordial wish, and we shall not quarrel with our readers for ignoring entirely the political reasons for gratitude, and falling to the practical observance and enjoyment of the day with such motives as may occur to them individually, or with no motive at all but that of spending a few pleasant hours, snatched from the cares of the world, with their friends or their families.

Stock Gambling.

The great stock gambling operations of the week should not be allowed to pass out of sight without the public drawing a few practical conclusions. The respectable and thoughtful portion of the community already hold men like DREW, SMITH, and GOULD as nothing but gamblers on a large scale. They bet their hundreds of thousands on chances, or on skillful tricks, precisely as the rouge et noir, or faro, or card-gamblers do, on a smaller field. If the calamities and successes of the week were confined to them, or if the whole of the wretched crew came to bankruptcy, the public would not trouble themselves about the matter. It is true that the Methodist Church is by no means honored in having one of these gamblers as a prominent supporter; still were their careers confined to their own clique, the world would have little to say about them. But the truth is, that it is these large fish that draw in the immense schools of "small fish" who sustain every stock market. The small investors, the petty capitalists all over the country, hearing of DREW making his hundreds of thousands in a single day, think they must find a short road to fortune through stock gambling. It is this fatal desire of our young men to be rich without work, which ruins so many of them, and fills the large cities with drones; and it is this desire which men like DREW and GOULD do the most to cherish and increase. A very experienced money-broker in Wall-street was once asked if he ever knew a fortune made and kept by stock speculations. He laughed at the simplicity of the question; he had known plenty of fortunes made and lost, but the successful and passionate speculator comes inevitably to grief in the end. The very success sharpens the passion, and he must return to the exciting venture again for mental occupation. The successful hits in the stock market are made by men who have earned fortunes elsewhere, and who can risk without too much danger, and, to a certain degree, command the market. The small operators who gamble, easily lose all; or, if they win, perpetually throw again to increase their earnings, and in the end meet the fate of all gamblers.

The business of buying and selling stocks is a perfectly reputable one. Every business community must have a market where its securities can be purchased and sold. It is also a legitimate occupation or speculation for a capitalist to purchase securities merely with the view of sale. The danger of the stock market, however, are in the easy money-lending and on the betting on chances. No money-lending in the world is so seductive and perilous to the inexperienced as the system of "margins" of the broker. The Jew of the Middle Ages, supplying the gamester of fortune, might be more usurious; he could not be half so tempting. All the usual ceremonies which make ordinary borrowing of money somewhat of a difficulty, are here dispensed with. The innocent young borrower deposits his thousand dollars with his broker, with his order, who makes his purchase of ten thousand dollars or more, lending him a small fortune with a stroke of his pen. He hears nothing of interest, or securities, or repayment. Suddenly the stock rises; the broker sells, and the young borrower finds himself a couple of thousand dollars richer, having done nothing, and scarcely having given a thought to his venture. He now borrows again, a still larger sum. All is serene and pleasant; the lender is smiling and accommodating. Tens of thousands pass between them, and the innocent young borrower hardly is conscious of it. At length a fall of values begins; the lender demands higher margins; the borrower's property melts like the snow; he cannot make good the proportion demanded; he asks for time; the broker, lately so agreeable, is stern and inexorable, and soon, with a stroke of the pen, all the hard earnings of the young speculator sink into the pit of Wall-street speculation, and he goes forth a poorer and perhaps wiser man.

Perhaps, if a young manjof some intelligence, he had fancied he could judge beforehand of the values of securities as wisely as his elders, but he now recognizes that the shifts of the market in no way depended on real values, but on a thousand elements of which he is as ignorant as he would be at Baden-Baden of what carries the ball to rouge or noir. And he sees also that his little bark is nothing amid these immense ships, which may crush him or carry him in tow, as they choose. But this is not the worst feature of stock speculation. The most genuine gambling is that familiar operation, the buying or selling "short;" the purchasing or parting with what a man has not, on a bet upon its value some time ahead. It is simply and solely gambling. Whoever succeeds in it is nothing but a gambler; whoever fails has no consolation. He ought to fail. The true remedy for the evils of the Stock Board is a purer public opinion. Parents and teachers and preachers throughout the country should try to imbue the young with the idea that no one has the right to be rich except by hard work. Patient industry, not sharp speculation, should be inculcated as the means of gaining a fortune. A boy should be taught that he is not worth half so much to the world if he makes his money by some sudden trick or turn-of-hand. And all should be warned that, to young speculators, Wall-street is nothing but a strand covered with wrecked fortunes. No gambler keeps his fortune. And as for the men who tempt these unfortunate youth who have lately been ruined in the market, the public Press, society, and the Church should have no other treatment for them than they now give to successful gamblers. They are merely gigantic gamblers, whose audacity, display, and immense pecuniary power cannot gild their vices, or condone their corrupt influence on the community.

Hilton, the Painter.

The future biographer who shall undertake to write the lives of "eminent painters" will find himself impelled, if he be a just and appreciative biographer, to adorn the frontispiece of his book with the portrait of HENRY HILTON, late "Ring" Commissioner of the Central Park. He will find, if he examines the records closely, that, as a pure painter—a painter per se, if we may so speak—HILTON has had no equal in any age—certainly not in the nineteenth century. There may have been men whose general ideas of art were more fully developed than HILTON'S—men who could not only paint with a tolerable degree of skill, but could also "sculp" occasionally, if need be, or invoke the muse, or draw the violin-bow. The world has, now and then, given birth to an Admirable Crichton, whose "many-sided" intellect enabled him to achieve distinction in almost any art or calling. We often hear it said of a man that if he had not been a great orator, he would have been a great poet, or if he had not been a great sculptor, he would have been a great architect. Any one who has seen Prof. AGASSIZ draw figures on a black-board can readily believe that if he had not chosen to be a great scientist, he might have made a great artist.

Not so with HILTON. He belongs to that class of men, from which the world's great geniuses have generally sprung, who devote their whole attention—their soul, as it were—to one branch of art, and by so doing surpass all their contemporaries. HILTON'S mind, as soon as he became a Park Commissioner, and found himself associated with men of æsthetic tastes, like PETER B. SWEENY and TOM FIELDS, began to show a decided leaning toward paint. As he took his daily drives through the Park, his mind became more and more absorbed in that branch of art, until he talked and dreamed of nothing but paint. FIELDS and SWEENY used occasionally to try and draw his mind away to a contemplation of the beauty and utility of putty, but it was of no avail. HILTON insisted upon following the natural bent of his genius, and took more delight in contemplating a paint-pot than MICHAEL ANGELO ever did in gazing at the dome of St. Peter's. FIELDS, who was fond of parodying the poets, used to say of him:

"More was his eye our painter, HILTON, seeing,
Than SWEENY with the Senate at his heels."

Nor is it surprising, when we consider the purity of his surroundings, that this "Ring" Commissioner should show a partiality for white paint. Our readers have learned from an article on the Central Park, published in the TIMES of Monday, how HILTON insisted, in opposition to the earnest protest of the sculptor INNIS, upon covering the bronze statue of "Eve at the Fountain" with a coat of white paint, and how he supplemented this achievement in "high art" by daubing another coat of white paint over the skeleton of the fin-back whale, presented to the Park Museum by Mr. PETER COOPER. These were merely the beginnings of that magnificent plan of improving the artistic features of the Central Park contemplated by Mr. HILTON. We are told that he seriously entertained the idea, at one time, and would doubtless have carried it out if his official term had not been brought to an untimely close, of covering the whole Park with a coat of white paint.

The public can now see what they have lost by his forced resignation as Commissioner, and we confess to a more or less guilty conscience in having been, perhaps, the chief agent in bringing about such a catastrophe. We can only plead in excuse that, at that time, we were ignorant of the exalted pitch to which HILTON had carried his ideas of art, and of the ideal perfection of that system of Park improvements contemplated by him. We now see our mistake and frankly acknowledge it; and, as the best reparation in our power, we propose that a new bureau be forthwith created in the Park Commission, to be called the "Bureau of Paint," and that Mr. HILTON be placed at its head. There are lots of unpainted statues remaining in the Park, and elsewhere about the City, awaiting the artistic touch of his white paint brush. That one of LINCOLN in Union-square looks as though it had waited much too long already. It is getting rusty, dirty, and mildewed. The statue of FRANKLIN, in front of our office, is still bright and brassy, and can wait a while longer. So can those somewhat diminutive figures that our neighbor, Alderman OTTENDORFER, has posted over the entrance to his new Staats-Zeitung building. But these, and all the other statues on Manhattan Island, whether molded out of brass, or bronze, or clay, or marble, or granite, will be sure to get dirty sooner or later; and then what a nice thing it will be to have HILTON ready with his pot and brush to put them all in shining uniform with coats of white paint.

The Philadelphia Post-Office.

The appointment by the President of Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRMAN as Postmaster of Philadelphia was not, in itself, a matter of very extraordinary consequence. The position is, indeed, an important one. The Post-office of a city containing nearly seven hundred thousand inhabitants is an institution the management of which materially affects many exceedingly valuable interests. But in this respect it is by no means peculiar, for the same thing may be said in regard to a great number of other Government offices. What gives the occurrence in question its principal interest is not the appointment itself, but the circumstances accompanying it and the grounds on which it was made.

Mr. FAIRMAN was appointed for two reasons; first, because he was considered a good man for the place, and second, on account of the effect anticipated from the system of promoting men who had done well in subordinate situations. A delegation of politicians, headed by the Mayor of Philadelphia, had previously taken themselves over the one hundred and forty miles, between that city and Washington, for the purpose of exerting their influence in favor of another gentleman. Their candidate, they claimed—and for aught we know with perfect truth—was well fitted for the duties of the office; but this was evidently not their main reason for urging his name upon the President, and they appear scarcely to have even taken the trouble to pretend that it had anything to do with their excursion to the national capital. With an ingenuousness and simplicity which did him great credit, the Mayor, as spokesman of the deputation, advocated the appointment desired on almost purely political grounds. The question whether an important post-office was to be made principally a portion of party machinery, or a means whereby merchants and others would get their letters with certainty and promptness, could hardly have been more distinctly presented if it had been directly stated in its most undisguised form. Seldom has an issue of the kind been more clearly made, and never has it been met by a more explicit answer than the reply of the President, as conveyed in his remarks to the delegation and his subsequent action.

The management of the Philadelphia Post-office has been, for several years, a source of pride and congratulation to men of all classes and both parties in that city. On the other hand, the administration of municipal affairs there has not been a matter of gratification to honest citizens of any shade of political opinion. It was, perhaps, not inappropriate, under these circumstances, for the principal municipal dignitary, if a change were desired in the mode of conducting the Post-office business, to head a delegation visiting Washington for that purpose. But an object is not necessarily a desirable one simply because, in the effort to accomplish it, things are got up in good taste. The exquisite perception of the harmony of ideas, displayed in placing the Mayor of a badly-paved, poorly-lighted, and atrociously taxed city like Philadelphia, at the head of a delegation to petition that the Post-office should be principally managed for the benefit of politicians—for that was the almost undisguised substance of their request—was, interesting and beautiful as in some respects it might be, not a sufficient argument for the end desired.

The interview of President GRANT with the Philadelphia politicians, and his action in regard to their request, are incidents of importance, not only to the residents of that city, but to the inhabitants of the whole country. And the voice of the nation has, with rare unanimity, approved his answer. Short as has been the time since that interview, the application of all the people to the p[illegible] in which the President's decision in the case was made is now a matter of history. Great as is the significance of his reply, it is not greater than the significance of the support it has received. Seldom, since the foundation of the Government, has the national Executive taken a step requiring so much firmness and moral courage. Still more seldom has he been so promptly and unequivocally sustained. The verdict of the country has been given, and given in such a manner that it will not be wise for politicians to attempt to set it aside.

Unpaid Letters.

It is said to be one of the beautiful compensations of this life that no one can sincerely try to help another without helping himself. A certain grain-dealer of New-Haven has been exemplifying this maxim in a fashion creditable to his ingenuity, and worthy of the proverbial reputation for quteness of his State. By a new and much talked-of Post-office regulation, unpaid letters are not delivered. The custom is to advertise them, so that those to whom such letters are addressed may, at their pleasure, redeem them. Now, it has lately been the subject of remark in New-Haven that no such lists of unpaid letters ever appear in the local newspapers, and after the omission had been talked of for some time, the reason for it has just been made public. It appears that our clever grain-dealer has hit upon an advertising dodge which is really something new under the sun, and which, if he could but patent it, might go far toward making his fortune. He has been in the habit of going to the Post-office, just before the lists were to be sent out to the journals, and putting a proper stamp on every unpaid letter, affixing, at the same time, another neat little label bearing his name and business address, with the added suggestion that he has paid the postage, and that, if the letter does the recipient any good, the benevolent advertiser will be glad to hear from him in the way of trade in return.

The results of this curious proceeding, which is said to have been carried on by the inventor since last April, have been amusing and even instructive. Some, of course, never notice the matter at all—the receivers of letters containing bills doubtless being among the silent ones. But many write at once to their benefactor, and of these not a few show their gratitude in a solid manner. The respondents almost invariably return the stamp put on their letters. Now and then somebody sends a dollar, and several stamps for the one expended are quite common. In one case a wedding is said to have been brought about, which, but for this intervention, would have been deferred indefinitely, and perhaps forever. Several grave misunderstandings have been averted, as it is quite easy to believe—the saving of protest for notes, the fulfillment of pulpit and lecture engagements, and the timely filling of orders for merchandise, being of the number. The letters of acknowledgement are usually very gratefully expressed—as a rule, of course, in proportion to the measure of service rendered—and a number of them, for all are preserved by the generous stamp-giver, are in their way literary curiosities. What with the excess of stamps returned by those who return any at all, the projector of this odd device finds early pecuniary reimbursement, and, as he certainly should sell more grain through so novel an advertisement, his bread will not have been cast upon the waters in vain.

The trouble of Mr. JOHN G. CHAPMAN—it would be petty to deny such a Columbus in the world of advertising the just fame of his discovery—will lie, we conjecture, in competition. Everybody else may do the same thing; and possibly we shall soon hear of letters being received from New-Haven covered all over with stamps and business cards. Although, in the shrewder order of minds, a suspicion may arise as to the unmixed benevolence of Mr. CHAPMAN'S motives, it is hardly well to spread broadcast among the masses the idea that individuals have greater faith in the honesty of the average citizen than have the authorities of the Post-office Department.

Stories of the Sea.

It is not unusual for the best of men to grow so weary of the petty meanness and the shameless dishonesty that are everywhere visible, as to temporarily lose faith in their fellow-men; to fancy that the days of noble deeds are over, and that heroic self-devotion has been wholly superseded by sordid selfishness. Suddenly there comes the story of some act so brave and noble, that like the blast of a sea-breeze sweeping through and purifying the unwholesome streets of a crowded seaport, it disperses in a moment cynicism and distrust, and gives one a new pride in his membership of a race that can yet furnish men ready to face any foe, and dare any danger in the cause of humanity. The stories of shipwreck which have come to us during the week are of this character, and no man can read without a thrill of admiration the record of the gallantry of the men of the Batavia and the Baltic, and of the unflinching endurance of the crew of the Carolina.

The letter of Mr. CLEMENS, which was published in the TIMES of Tuesday last, describes the heroism of the officers and men of the steamer Batavia, who, in the midst of a wild tempest, manned a life-boat and rescued the crew of a water-logged bark. The tempest was one of unusual violence. The wrecked bark was completely helpless, the men having sought shelter in the main rigging from the sea which constantly swept the deck. It was late in the afternoon when the wreck was discovered, and to the frightful hazard of launching a boat in the tremendous sea that was running, was added the risk that the boat, even if it should not be swamped, would be lost in the thickness of the coming night. There was not the slightest hesitation, however, among the brave sailors of the Batavia. Volunteers came forward as soon as they were called, the boat was launched, and the terrible toil of rowing a mile against the full force of the tempest was unhesitatingly accomplished. The wreck was reached and the men rescued, and though the crew of the boat and their benumbed passengers succeeded in reaching the steamer, it was impossible to save the life-boat that had rendered such good service. A more gallant act, more gallantly performed, cannot be found in the long record of disaster and bravery at sea.

Not less noble was the conduct of the men of the steamer Baltic. On the same day on which the Batavia saved the crew of the bark Charles Ward, the Baltic fell in with the wreck of the ship Assyria, the crew of which had been two days clinging to the rigging. Two boats were at once called away, the second and third officers assuming charge of them respectively, and the steward, who was under no obligation to peril his life in assuming a duty which seamen alone could have been expected to undertake, nobly volunteered his aid at the oar. The sinking vessel was safely gained, but one of the boats became disabled, and the other was compelled to make two trips in order to save the seventeen men of the Assyria, as well as their own comrades of the injured boat. The storm was the same as that which the Batavia encountered, and the heroes of the Baltic furnished fresh evidence that the traditional gallantry of the sailor has not vanished, although the prosaic stoker has to so great an extent superseded the able seaman.

The wreck of the Carolina, a steamer bound from Baltimore to Queenstown, though unaccompanied by the unselfish daring which rescued the crews of the Charles Ward and the Assyria, nevertheless furnished a shining instance of bravery in the unflinching discharge of duty and endurance in the face of frightful hardships. From the 4th to the 14th of November, the Carolina was struggling with the fury of the elements. A greater part of the time her boiler deck was under water. The sea continually broke over her, sweeping away bulwarks and boats. The furnace-fires were almost daily extinguished, and the pumps were choked with ashes. Not for a moment, however, were the efforts to save the ship relaxed. The firemen stood to their posts when up to their waists in water. The pumps never ceased their steady clanging so long as they could be made available, and when they finally broke down, the crew bailed with buckets and casks. When at last, after ten days and nights of incessant toil, the leak could no longer be fought with any possibility of success, the crew took to the rigging, and lashed themselves fast to wait either for succor or death. They were happily saved by a Norwegian bark, but during the whole period of their dauntless struggle for life, we hear of no recreant who shirked his duty, and no coward who preferred the oblivion of drunkenness to the sober effort to save the ship and her company.

The blood of the old Norse Sea Kings yet beats in the veins of British and American sailors. Bravery, self-sacrifice, and the unhesitating discharge of duty, are still the characteristic virtues of the seaman. Politicians may lie and cheat, and stock-speculating thieves may practice their heartless swindles, but nobility and courage have by no means died out of the Anglo-Saxon race.

MINOR TOPICS.

Even Tammany thieves, in some rare cases, find that the way of the transgressor is hard. It is something for the cause of justice that THOMAS C. FIELDS is a fugitive, for the fact implies a consciousness of the possibility of punishment. But his safety is the danger of his friends, as his bondsman discovered yesterday, when his property was seized by the Sheriff to satisfy the bond, which had been forfeited by his failure to appear for trial. It was very like FIELDS to betray his friends for the purpose of securing himself from harm.

Any one fond of local antiquities would do well to explore a deep hole in the pavement of Beekman-street, below Nassau, and near the Police station. It is about three feet long and two feet wide, and eighteen inches deep—"not so wide as a church door nor so deep as a well," but it will do to break a horse's leg in, and to prove the utter negligence with which many minor matters are attended to in our streets. No one curious in the matter, however, need be in a hurry about visiting the hole, for, though it is dangerous, and in a very crowded street, there is no prospect of its being repaired.

There is trembling in the ranks of United States Assessors and Assistant Assessors. The bill of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for abolishing their offices meets with the approval of a considerable number of the members of Congress, who promise to "go for" the unfortunates as soon as Congress meets. The spectacle of a general election followed by the abolition of a great number of offices, the consolidation of others, and filling the remainder by competitive examination, is excessively discouraging to the ordinary politician.

Mr. NAST still lingers about the regions of politics. Whatever the general public may think of his last cartoon—and we imagine there will only be hearty sympathy with it—Messrs. CAMERON and HARTRANFT will see the point of it distinctly. It represents Gen. GRANT declaring to a group of discomfited brigands, among whom these gentlemen are not difficult to recognize, that the civil service rules must be enforced. The lesson needs to be "rubbed in," and Mr. NAST succeeds in doing it.

A bill is, it seems, before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House embodying a scheme of postal telegraphy, which at one time met with favor. It is an apparently pertinent suggestion that the Committee report as a substitute a bill abolishing the franking privilege. Certainly, whoever proposes to burden the Post-office Department with the novel and onerous work of a national telegraph, ought to be willing to see it first relieved of the enormous load imposed by the franking abuse.

By an inadvertence we stated yesterday that the balance in hand of the Children's Excursion Fund was deposited with the New-York Trust Company. It should have been the National Trust Company.

Democrats are conceding to Mr. GREELEY that he is fully competent, "from both on inside and outside view," to determine whether calumny pays in politics. One Democratic newspaper has discovered that in the late campaign he and [illegible] by the bad condition he had [illegible] and the equally bad one they had given him. It is true often that Democrats are able to get so near the truth as this.

Indiana and Illinois must look to their laurels, for Kansas has entered the lists to contest with them the palm of rapidity in the divorce business. The neophyte has made astonishing progress, and we are informed that in a recent case the cause was heard, the divorce granted, and the lady remarried to "a confused and blessing yankee" in the short space of twelve minutes. There cannot be any mistake about the matter, for the Kansas newspaper, which bursts into magnificent head lines in honor of the event, assures us that "the lady was married by Judge BLISS' watch, and we know that the Judge's watch does not run fast." No wonder the exulting married male humanity of Kansas are in ecstasies, and confidently challenge Chicago or even Indiana "to show a record on the divorce question which will equal the foregoing."

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"La Favorita" was sung at the Academy of Music, last evening, for the fourth time this season. Mme. Lucca, as usual, personated Leonora with great effect, while Signor Abramoski profited by being in excellent vocal condition, and produced an unwonted impression by his delivery of the fine recitatives and the well-known final cavatina allotted to Fernando. Mme. Lucca will next be heard in "Gli Ugonotti," which opera will be done on Friday.... Auber's "Fra Diavolo" was sung by the Lichtmay troupe, at the Terrace Garden Theatre, last night. The audience was not very numerous, but the performance was excellent. Mr. Wilhelm Horn, who appeared in the title rôle, was in capital condition, and he was vociferously encored in the second act, when he sang Abt's "Schlaf wohl," instead of "Sweet Agnes." Fraulein Louise Beckmann made her début in the rôle of Zerlina, and gave much satisfaction. She has a charming voice and is a piquante actress. Frau Perl and Herr Carl Formes, as Lady and Lord Cockburn, provoked a great deal of mirth, and their duet in act the first was re-demanded. As a whole, the recital was decidedly successful, and it will be repeated next Wednesday. To-night, "The Jewess" is to be given.

AFFAIRS AT NIBLO'S.

Contrary to the general expectation, Niblo's Theatre was not prepared for the reception of the public, yesterday. The first representation in the new house will take place, it is now announced, on Saturday evening next.

Miscellaneous.

THE ANNOUNCEMENTS FOR THANKSGIVING DAY.

A reference to our advertising columns will enlighten the reader as to the special entertainments to occur this afternoon and this evening. In this place, we need only notice, particularly, the grand operatic concert and performance to be given at the Academy of Music, with the majority of Mr. Maretzek's artists as the interpreters of a capital programme; the promise of a matinée representation at Booth's, with "The Stranger" as the piece; and the tidings that three performances may be attended at Wood's Museum, at Barnum's Exhibition, and at Bailey & Co.'s Great Show. Afternoon entertainments, with the regular evening plays and players, are offered at all the other houses not named in this reference.

STREET IMPROVEMENTS.

The Fifth-Avenue and Broadway Projects—The Awards in the Madison-Avenue Extension.

The Committee on Streets of the Board of Aldermen, consisting of Messrs. Radde and Joyce, met yesterday, for the purpose of hearing any objection there may be to the project of widening Fifth-avenue, by compelling the owners of buildings hereafter to keep their stoop lines within the limit prescribed by law—namely, fifteen feet. No one appeared to make objection, and the Committee adjourned.

The appeal from the decision of Judge Gilbert, confirming the report of the Commissioners in the matter of the widening of Broadway, above Thirty-fourth-street, came on for a hearing in the Supreme Court, General Term, yesterday. Counsel for the property-owners took the preliminary objection that two of the Judges assigned to sit in General Term—Ingraham and Brady—being disqualified to hear the argument, by reason of the ownership of property affected by the improvement, the case should be ordered to be heard in another Judicial Department, in conformity with the provisions of the statute.

The Court, which was constituted by Judges Leonard, Larned, and Danforth, held that the objectionable Judges not being actually sitting at the General Term, where the argument is to be heard, the provisions of the statute did not apply. Argument was then had by Messrs. H. H. Anderson, A. J. Vandarpool, and Delafield, on behalf of the property-owners, and by Mr. O'Gorman for the City. Decision reserved.

Mr. O'Gorman, Corporation Counsel, appeared before Judge Fanner, in Supreme Court Chambers, yesterday, and stated that in the case of the bill of the Commissioners' expenses for the opening of One Hundred and Thirty-sixth-street, which was presented to the Court for taxation on the 6th of November last, Mr. H. Anderson, who had been appointed referee in the matter, has lately declined to act as such. In such cases the law made no provision for payment of referees, and counsel submitted that, if these costs can be taxed by the Court as the law provides, it should be done in that manner. Judge Fanner said it was proper that the written declination of Mr. Anderson should be before him, and, on the Corporation Counsel offering to procure this, the motion to tax was directed to stand over.

In the case of the Madison-avenue extension, the report of the Commissioners will undergo considerable alteration before they finally present it to the Court for confirmation. On the subject of the awards made by them for the lots taken on the line of the extension, there appears to be ample room for revision. The award to W. T. Everson of $67,000, for four lots which were bought by him a short time before for $24,000, has already been mentioned. In another part of the intended extension, eight lots are taken, and the award for them is at the rate of $4,500 for each. Ten lots of precisely similar character, on the same line, were bought, since the Commission was appointed, for $26,000, by Mr. Everson. Where only the half of certain of these lots is taken by the Commissioners, the award is made at the same rate, though it is obvious that the remaining half is almost doubled in value by its being made to front directly on the new avenue. Not all the awards are made at this extravagant rate; the favored owners are limited in number, but the amounts awarded them are quite sufficient, in connection with the fees of the Commissioners, to account for the immense costliness of this undertaking.

Seventh Regiment Promenade Concerts.

The first of the series of Saturday evening promenade concerts given by the members of the Seventh Regiment, N. G. S. N. Y., takes place on Saturday next, and will be continued through the Winter season. Five concerts will be given, to take place on the following dates: Nov. 30, Dec. 21, Jan. 25, Feb. 22, March 29. The object of these social reunions is to afford the members of the regiment an opportunity to meet each other on other occasions than the ordinary military assemblies, and promote social harmony among them. They have heretofore been very successful in furthering the objects expected from them, and have been at once fashionable and popular. The music will be furnished by Grafulla's full band, and if the experience of former years be a criterion, this series of concerts will be one of the most successful social events of the season.

The Use of Sewing-Machines.

During the late session of the State Medical Society of Virginia, at Staunton, Dr. Parker read a very interesting paper on the subject of sewing-machines and their effect on the health of females, in which the conclusions were announced:

First. That fatigue is bad disease, and that there is no reason to conclude that the use of the muscles employed in machine-work for a reasonable time is injurious. Second. That the machine may be used for four or five hours daily in a family by a lady in ordinary health without injury. Third. That the damage to health in the factory is due to the hygienic conditions under which the work is done, and the natural celibacy of some of the operatives, uniting them for long-continued labor of any kind. Fourth. That the sewing-machine is a great boon to womankind, increasing her compensation, protecting her person, and in the family lessening her arduous

THE CIVIL SUITS AGAINST THE RING.

The knowledge of what is the precise standing at the present moment of the suits brought against Tweed, Connolly, and others, to recover possession of six millions of dollars wrongfully appropriated by them, is confined to a very few people in this City. Still fewer, perhaps, have any clear perception of the importance of the issue raised on the defendants' demurrer, that the Attorney-General, representing the people of the State of New-York, has no legal capacity to sue in these actions. To the ordinary newspaper reader, the present condition of these suits seems a kind of technical muddle, from which a conflict of authority or a miscarriage of justice may be reasonably expected to result. On one side, there is the decision of a majority of the Judges of the General Term of the Supreme Court, before whom the question was argued in Albany County, affirming the right of the people of the State, and, inferentially, of them only, to sue for the recovery of the stolen money. On the other, there is the decision of the Judges sitting in General Term in this County, affirming that the right of action lies with the Board of Supervisors and the County of New-York. As the decision in both cases is simply to affirm the order of a lower Court overruling a demurrer, the question of jurisdiction cannot, at the present stage of these suits, be carried any further. On such a point the decision of the General Term is final, and cannot be carried to the Court of Appeals. Here, then, we have the peculiar position of these Ring civil suits. That moribund official, the Corporation Counsel, can push in the local Courts the suits whose necessity only occurred to him after the State prosecutions had been for some time in preparation, and Messrs. O'Conor, Evarts, Tilden, and Peckham can prosecute, on behalf of the Attorney-General, the suits which grew out of the authorization received from Attorney-General Champlin on Oct. 17, 1871. Of course, the first decision obtained by either of these parties will act as a bar on the further proceedings of the other party. The practical question for the tax-payers of New-York to consider is, in whose hands are these interests safest? And this ought to be considered, not only in reference to the interests immediately at stake, but in regard to the establishment of the principles which will operate as the most effective check upon similar abuses of public trust in the future. This opens up the entire extent of those legal and historical precedents upon which the action of the State is based. A brief statement of these will show at once the interest and the importance of the discussion which this branch of the subject has already developed.

It will be remembered that in the middle of October, 1871, Judge Pierrepont, Gen. Dix, and others, acting as a delegation from the Committee of Seventy, waited upon Gov. Hoffman with the view of urging upon his attention the necessity of doing something to satisfy the popular demand for justice upon the officials who had so grossly plundered the City of New-York. The only practical result of this visit was the authorization already referred to, in which the Attorney-General delegated to Mr. O'Conor his "official power to prosecute for the frauds recently brought to light in the City of New-York." The necessity for invoking the aid of the State was, at that time, sufficiently apparent. The suits against the dishonest officials could not be brought into the local Courts, and that for several reasons. The Corporation Counsel was the only official who could be called upon to prosecute the suits against the Ring thieves, and he was the creature of the very men it was desired to bring to justice; Barnard and Cardozo, also their creatures, were still on the Bench of the Supreme Court; the Mayor and Aldermen, or the Board of Supervisors, who would have been nominal plaintiffs in the suits against Tweed and others, had either in some degree shared the guilt of the defendants, or were in avowed sympathy with them. The corporate authorities of the City and County showed further that they had no disposition to right the public wrongs, inasmuch as they allowed six weeks to elapse after the guilt of Tweed and his confederates had been proven without taking any action to recover the stolen money. When Hall and O'Gorman did, a little later, make an attempt to keep up appearances by commencing "match suits" in the name of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty of the City of New-York, and in the name of the Board of Supervisors of the County of New-York, these suits were, in spite of the offensive overcaution which dictated their titles, immediately condemned by public opinion as mere collusive suits, and the people persisted in looking to the State for their only hope of redress. It was to the same collusive suits that Judge Ingraham and his associates of the General Term gave, the other day, a quasi-judicial standing. It was also over the right of local prosecution then obtained, that certain parties who have an obvious interest in keeping alive Tweed's hopes of defeating justice, indulged in some rather premature exultation.

But apart altogether from the special circumstances which rendered the local Courts and prosecuting officers unfit to be trusted with the suits, to recover millions of stolen money remaining a debt against the tax-payers, there are certain broad and salutary principles on which the right of the State to prosecute can be justified. In studying the line of argument by which this was sustained, it is as well to separate the consideration of these two propositions:

1. The State has a right of action in all cases of breach of public trust.

2. In the case of the members of the Ring Board of Audit, no authority other than the State has any right of action.

The elaborate and interesting arguments of Messrs. O'Conor and Tilden, and the carefully-drawn opinions of Judges Miller and Potter, in support of these propositions, are necessarily devoted, without making any formal distinction between them, sometimes to the elucidation of the one, and sometimes to that of the other. Still, the bearing of the questions involved will be better understood by taking them up separately. The State then inherited the legal standing of the Crown as parens patriæ, and the Attorney-General could claim the exercise of the same rights as his English prototype possesses, in virtue of the following clause in the State Constitution of 1777:

"Such parts of the Common law of England and the Statute law of England and of Great Britain, and the acts of the Legislature of the Colony of New-York, as did together form the law of the said Colony on the 19th of April, 1775, shall be and continue the law of this State, subject to such alterations and provisions as the Legislature of the State shall from time to time make concerning the same."

Or, as Mr. Tilden puts it:

"The people of the State of New-York have every right to sue which the Crown in England had, when our jurisprudence branched off from that of our mother country, unless such right has been limited by a restrictive provision of the Constitution or of a statute. And the Attorney-General has the same right to represent, in such suits, the people here as the same officer has to represent the Crown in England. The case of Minor elaborately argues to establish this proposition. It declares that the powers of our Attorney-General have not been impaired by statute. It asserts that he has all the powers belonging to his office at common law, and such additional powers as the Legislature has seen fit to confer upon him. In Law, 260. The same doctrine is conceded by Mr. Justice Strong and Chief Justice Chase in the opinion which has been submitted by the counsel for the defendants. It is elaborately expounded and illustrated by Judge Dear, in the case of Davis against The Mayor, (3 Dear, 407.) It is assumed as the law of this State, in the numerous tax-payers' cases at General Term, and in the Court of Appeals."

Or, still again, as eloquently illustrated by Mr. O'Conor:

"This (legal entity) can be no other than that great, always-existing, unchangeable, political, and legal person or corporation, the State. It is absolute sovereign of its whole territory, and of all things therein. It owns all the land, for it can levy taxes thereon to the last cent of its value. It might be said to own the people themselves, for it can tax them to the last cent of their earnings, and can, by conscription, force them into the field and condemn them to inevitable death or bondage. It is a sovereign, with powers that may be used for the most oppressive purposes. Shall it be denied the sovereign power of protecting its people? Surely not. It represents no single class merely, but the whole people. If represents the people of the past, if they can be supposed to have any interest. It represents all future generations. It represents the tax-payers, not only of fifty years hence, but of three thousand years hence, and it is charged with the duty of protecting them, whether they are to be the posterity of the present race, or of some other people who may succeed us as dwellers in the land."

Judge Potter, in his opinion, clenches this very succinctly as follows:

"The right to bring this action, if it exists at all, is the well-established rule of right and duty by the common law; the duty of protecting public interests against public agents invested with trusts."

All these citations, as will be noted, are of the nature of general conclusions. To establish them it was of course necessary to show, first, that under the common law of England the Attorney-General had power to proceed to recover moneys fraudulently withheld or misappropriated from public use; second, that the Legislature had never abrogated or changed any of the powers derived by this officer from English practice; and, third, that the people injured by the fraudulent transactions of the Board of Audit constitute such a class as are specially entitled to the protection of the strong arm of the State. The practically unbroken continuity of English judicial opinions in regard to the right of the Crown to enforce through its prosecuting officer restitution of public moneys fraudulently misapplied, was very clearly shown in the argument of Mr. Tilden. The cases of the Attorney-General against the corporation of Dublin, the same against the corporation of Liverpool, and the same against the corporation of Belfast, were cited among others to show that the uniform opinion of the Judges of the English Court of Chancery sustained the right of the Attorney-General to bring action on behalf of the injured tax-payers of a given locality, and the jurisdiction of a Court of equity to deal with the cases so presented.

As to the second point, that the Attorney-General of the State of New-York possesses, unimpaired by constitutional or statutory restrictions, all the powers which the common law confers on the Attorney-General of England, that has never been seriously questioned. The third point affecting the peculiar standing of the parties injured by the transactions of the Board of Audit, can be better understood when taken in connection with the peculiar official responsibility of the members of that Board, and the consideration of both may fitly be postponed to another article.

VANDERBILT'S RAILROAD.

The Old Nuisance on the Fourth-avenue Line Still Existing—Waiting in Several Blocks for the Exclusive Use of the Company.

The Legislature at its last session gave the railroad companies controlled by Vanderbilt the legal authority to sink the tracks above Forty-fourth-street, and erect bridges for crossings. This authorization was understood to be in the interests of the public. It was supposed that the dangers so often complained of would be averted, that the obstructions to pedestrians and vehicles would be thus removed, and that the streets well nigh rendered impassable by the many perils attending a passage across them, would be again opened for the free and unrestrained use of the public. The value of property which had become greatly depreciated, began to rise in consequence of the projected improvement. The present aspect of the avenue taken possession of by Mr. Vanderbilt affords the public but little cause for congratulation. A number of property-owners yesterday remarked to a TIMES reporter that they had complained until they have become tired of complaining. They have come to regard the giant monopolist as a foe too powerful for them to cope with, even when they combine their strength. They did think that the action of the Legislature would improve the condition of the avenue, but, as one of them said, despairingly, "Look at it."

The reporter thus invited made an inspection. The obstructions so often complained of were found to exist as numerously as ever. Freight cars blockaded the streets, not otherwise closed between Forty-fourth-street and Forty-ninth-street, and between Forty-ninth-street and Fifty-third-street. The only available crossing for vehicles was found to be Forty-ninth-street, where chains were stretched across to keep back impatient drivers of wagons and carriages, until the men stationed there give notice that they can pass quickly without being run over by some snorting locomotive. The broad area swarmed as usual with human beings—a large proportion children—crossing and threading their way through the myriads of iron tracks. Passenger-trains were dashing in and out at a rate varying from ten to twenty miles per hour, and switch-engines were darting hither and thither with an apparently reckless disregard of anybody who might stand in the way. Among the latter class of engines was No. 7, known to the railroad employes as "Old Danger," and whose murderous record has been given in the TIMES.

"Has that engine killed and injured as many people as they say?" asked a gentleman, last evening, of a switchtender. "She's done a deal of harm," said the man. "Do they change her engineer after an accident?" asked the gentleman. "She's got the same engineer she's had for over a year," was the answer.

At this moment an express-train came thundering along, as a grocery wagon was just about to cross. The horses, rearing in fright, were checked in time, and a young woman, who had attempted to cross, fell back, trembling with alarm.

The appointment of men at the crossings, and the doubling of the old force so employed, seem at present to be the only appreciable fruit of the crusade which the TIMES commenced and successfully conducted against the nuisances growing out of the Grand Central Depot about a year ago.

Inquiries pushed among a number of the railroad attaches revealed the fact that there is much ignorance existing as to when and where the sinking of the track will begin. Some were under the impression that three or four years would elapse before anything would be accomplished, and others were under the impression that it would never be sunk this side of Fifty-sixth-street. All of them talked like men who belong to a corporation indifferent to the wants and feelings of the people living on the line of the road. One of the officials stated that work had been begun this side of Yorkville, and that the sunken track would commence at Forty-eighth-street.

Bridges are now in course of construction at Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, and Forty-eighth streets. The grades of the streets are raised, and the bridges are being built to extend from about the centre of the blocks on each side of the avenue, and one about one-half or three-quarters the width of the cross streets. Brick walls about ten feet high are being erected on each side of the avenue, extending from bridge to bridge, from Forty-fourth-street to Forty-ninth.

The avenue for five blocks in length and half that number in width is thus securely walled in and transformed into a huge yard for the exclusive use of the railroads centering here. An area of space greater than that covered by the depot is thus acquired and appropriated by the Company, and the amount so land in the heart of the City is worth millions of dollars, the Company may be said to be a considerable winner by being forced to "sink the tracks." This is the view taken by many property-holders on the line of the road. Behind a wall of twelve-feet-high cars above Forty-ninth-street, Vanderbilt adds at pleasure to the extent of territory he may happen to want for his own uses. Not satisfied with the lion's share of the avenue, the Railroad Company are continually conquering more territory. Between Ninety-second and Ninety-third-streets they are erecting a wooden structure on the avenue on top of the tunnel. It is twenty-five feet wide and seventy-five feet long, and is to be used as a blacksmith shop. There it is to stand, in the language of a gentleman who owns a house whose windows look out upon it, obstructing and disfiguring the street, and endangering the safety of the houses on each side in case of fire. The gentleman, who is a merchant of some wealth, but without the millions of the railroad corporation, has made up his mind as to the legality of this saloon by the Company, and has been informed that they have no right to build a structure of this kind on a public thoroughfare.

The excavation for the road, this gentleman says, will be about sixty feet deep at Ninety-second-street. There is to be an excavation in the centre, and at each side of the street. Holes are being cut for ventilation, four in each block, and trees belonging to residents are ruthlessly cut down without compensation being offered. The noise of locomotive bells and whistles still continues. It was remarked in the hearing of a railroad attache that the patients in the hospital corner of Fifty-first-street and the avenue must suffer therefrom. "Oh," said the man, "they get used to it after awhile."

GOULD AND ERIE.

The Defense Ordered to Proceed—Proceedings—Affidavit of Augustus Schell in Relation to Gould's Arrest.

On the application of the counsel for the Erie Railway Company, in the suit against Jay Gould, Judge Fancher yesterday granted an order to the defense to show cause why the order appointing Cephas Brainerd as referee to take the deposition of Wm. R. Travers should not be vacated as improvident, and the question will be argued before Judge Fancher, at the sitting of the Court to-morrow, the defense being meanwhile directed to stay all further proceedings. The stay was granted upon the affidavits of Travers and S. L. M. Barlow, in which it was set forth that the former was not unwilling to make an affidavit to be used upon the application to vacate the order upon which Gould was arrested, but that he (Travers) denied the legality of any oral examination out of Court. In his affidavit, Mr. Travers further states that he has never refused voluntarily to make any affidavit that might be required of him on the part of the defendant, and that, on Nov. 25, he agreed with a representative of the counsel for the defense to meet Mr. D. D. Field at Mr. Barlow's office and subscribe to an affidavit embracing all his (Travers') knowledge of the circumstances connected with Gould's arrest. Mr. Field brought with him a stenographer, and desired to make an oral examination, but, on the advice of Mr. Barlow, Travers refused, on the ground that Field had no right to make any searching examination into his private affairs, but offered to answer questions submitted in writing, and to subscribe to an affidavit embodying the statements thus elicited. He also expressed a willingness to give any supplementary evidence that might be needed, but Mr. Field declined to accept any but an immediate oral examination, and applied for and obtained an order directing the same before a referee.

The affidavit of Mr. Augustus Schell was yesterday taken before Mr. A. R. McDonough, referee, and added to the papers to be used by the defense in support of the application to vacate the order of arrest. Mr. Schell's testimony confirms a great portion of that given by Mr. Horace F. Clark, which was published yesterday, and expresses the opinion that the arrest was brought about by stock speculators, who were in imminent danger of financial loss through the "corner" in North-western common stock. Mr. Schell's testimony is, in substance, as follows:

I reside in New-York City, and have relations with several railroad companies, incorporated under other institutions. I had during the present month, and still retain, large interests in North-western common, Lake shore, and other railroad stocks. I have been a holder of this class of stock for several years, and am tolerably familiar with the market. In the early part of October, the stock market was depressed, owing to a loss up of money, which was occasioned mainly by the action of the Treasury of the Government in making an additional issue of legal tenders, which occurred, I think, about the 5th or 7th of October. During that month, and up to the time of the Boston fire, (Nov. 9), the market was unsettled and unsettled. By reason of the Boston fire, a considerable depression existed in the early part of Monday, Nov. 11, but the market rallied, and became quite active and excited, and continued so up to the 20th of November. Between Nov. 11 and 22 there was a considerable advance in the price of North-western common, and the minimum advance gave rise to considerable discussion, at that time, in business circles, and was commented on by the newspapers. There was a rumor in circulation in the early part of November that the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad Company intended to increase their stock $10,000,000 by the issue of that amount of bonds, forthwith convertible into stock; but it was subsequently publicly reported that the design had been abandoned. On the evening of Nov. 21 I heard a rumor that some proceedings, instigated by the short sellers of North-western common, were to be taken, in the Erie Railway Company against Jay Gould, and next day, the 22d, I received information, a few minutes after noon, that something was to happen at 2 P. M. which would cause a panic in the stock market. Shortly after 3 o'clock on that day I went to the office of Osborne & Chapin, and there found Mr. Gould in custody of the Sheriff's officer. I conferred with Mr. Horace F. Clark, who was present, and we decided to proffer bail on the spot. When we went to the Sheriff's office a schedule of the securities required by me in New-York City was demanded, but, on the remonstrance of my counsel, the request was withdrawn. Persistence in this demand would cause great delay in all concerned. I am convinced, from attendant circumstances, that the arrest had been made in the interest of a stock-jobbing speculation, and was intended to remove Mr. Gould from his place of business, at a most critical period in the critical condition of the stock market. The most important time of the day is between 2 and 3 P. M., as stock deliveries are made up to 2½, and between that time and 3, the margins are adjusted and bank accounts made up. The arrest and removal from his office at a critical time, of a man largely interested in stock dealings, would at any time injure his in a business way, and would affect the market. The unsettled and critical condition of the market, would, had he been imprisoned for the remainder of the day, have been almost certain financial ruin to him. It would also have inflicted a blow to many in the stock market more extensive and disastrous than the events of "Black Friday," in 1869, and a number of persons would have been financially ruined. The excitement would, in my opinion, have extended to all active and speculative stocks, and a depression would have ensued which would have been profitable only to those who sell short of stock and place gain by such casualties. I have been interested in large corporations for several years, and can not conceive of any benefit to be derived by the Erie Railroad by this arrest, as Gould would have been financially ruined, and would have been left without the means of paying his alleged indebtedness to that company. I doubt whether any man in New-York could furnish $100,000 bail at an hour's notice, and only under peculiar fortunate circumstances could bail to the amount of $1,000,000 be procured in that period. (Signed.) AUGUSTUS SCHELL.

The Derby-Everard Collection.

We have already called attention to the exhibition of foreign works of art of high class now on exhibition at the Academy of Design. The Academy will be open today and during the evening, and as the price of admission is but a nominal one, the galleries will doubtless be thronged. Of the merits of the works on view our opinion is already on record. In an London Art Journal we find the following notice of the collection:

"Mr. P. L. Everard is about to open an exhibition of modern pictures in New-York; he has taken with him a very large collection of the best works of the greater masters of the schools of Belgium, Germany, France, and Italy—Meissonier, Gallait, Portaels. The last would occupy more space than we can well spare; probably one hundred painters will be represented. No doubt the rare and admirable assemblage of grand productions will have a very beneficial influence in America, where art is beginning to find its most liberal patrons. Above all things, it is essential that the art-lovers of the New World should not be deceived as to the works they purchase; we know they have been so to a large extent; the seeds that are easy here are difficult there, and unless confidence may be reposed in the dealer, there will be danger and consequent hesitation in forming or adding to galleries. Our readers in the United States—and we have very many—may accept our assurance that the reputation of Mr. Everard is established in this country as well as in Belgium; his sales in England have been prodigious in number and in value; and we know that he has given entire satisfaction to those with whom he has dealt.

"American collectors may be sure that any picture offered by him is a veritable production of the master whose work it professes to be. We believe America will never have been such a collection as that which is probably now 'on view' there. It cannot but go a long way to mature the taste and foster the knowledge that is now rapidly spreading in the great country of the hereafter, where art is of a surety destined to produce an enormous amount of good. Among its native artists are many who already rank the highest rank in painting as well as in sculpture; but it is not likely that as yet, in a world where few of its institutions are a century old, art can have obtained the extent of 'patronage' that counts its patrons by thousands. The visit of Mr. Everard to the States will, we are sure, reward the buyer, as well as the seller, of grand examples of modern art."

A Correction.

The Agent of the Associated Press denies that his New-Orleans correspondent is an ex-Confederate officer, or that he sent any false dispatch in favor of the Warmoth party, as stated by our correspondent yesterday. Under these assurances, we make the necessary correction, our correspondent having, probably, been misled in his information.

Seizure of Thomas C. Field's Private Residence.

Deputy Sheriff Seebacher, by virtue of an attachment issued in a civil suit commenced against Thomas C. Fields, by Messrs. Michael J. Quigg and David C. Banckar, and C. Banckar, has seized the handsome private residence of Mr. Fields, together with its furniture, and has placed it in the hands of keepers to hold possession until the issue of the suit is determined. Messrs. Quigg and Banckar are contractors, and it is stated that the suit is brought to recover for work done by them on Mr. Fields' residence.

Florence's Hotel, at McComb's Dam, so well known to drivers on Harlem Lane, was yesterday seized by George W. Ridgeway, acting for the Sheriff, to satisfy a levy of $6,000, for which amount Mr. Florence was bondsman for Thomas C. Fields.

POSTSCRIPT.

THREE O'CLOCK, NOV. 28—6 A. M.

TWO THEATRES GONE.

Destruction of Lina Edwin's and the Arion Concert Hall.

A Brilliant Spectacle—Fierce Spread of the Flames—Heroic Efforts of the Firemen—Loss $50,000.

About 2½ A. M., today, a fire broke out in a building in the rear of No. 718 Broadway, the front of which is occupied as a shoe-store by Mr. Market. The fire spread rapidly to the adjoining buildings in the rear of Nos. 714, 716, 718, 720, and 722, front.

Two of these were known as Lina Edwin's Theatre, last occupied by Kelly & Leon's Minstrels, and the Arion Music Hall. The light material of these houses fed the fire, and it spread rapidly through them. The extensions of Nos. 714 and 716, the main building of which is an old-style double mansion, with a heavy colonnade entrance, burned fiercely, and threatened the destruction of the whole edifice.

The occupants of the old mansion appeared to have fled on the first alarm, leaving the elegant furniture to its fate. Through this building the firemen were enabled to bring water to bear on the fire, but it was soon apparent that their efforts must be confined to saving the front buildings. Behind these the fire roared like a hundred blast-furnaces, and sent up volumes of smoke and myriads of blazing fragments and sparks, which were carried over Lafayette-place and Fourth-avenue.

The firemen also brought streams to bear from Lafayette-place, and thus protect the fine old row of buildings occupied by the Columbia Law School and as private residences.

An immense crowd of people soon assembled in Broadway, near the scene, they being naturally attracted by the bright light. The Police, under the command of Capt. Byrnes, of the Fifteenth Precinct, were soon on the ground and were joined by the reserves of the Eighth, Fourteenth, and Eighteenth Wards. A strong cordon was immediately drawn across Broadway, and the crowds driven back as far as Eighth-street, and down to Fourth-street, in order to afford the firemen ample room for operating on the fire.

The scene from Broadway was thrilling. The rear walls of the buildings looked like sheets of flame, so completely were they enveloped in the flames of the theatre and music hall.

At 3½ A. M., the prospect was that the front buildings would be saved, but is so damaged a condition that total consumption would almost be preferable.

Among the occupants of the buildings on Broadway were Col. Alston Brown, Dramatic Agency; Market, boot-maker; One store, belonging to a furniture-dealer, was filled with furniture, which could not escape damage.

Hope Chapel has experienced many changes during the last fifteen years. Divine service was held there for several years, and it subsequently fell into the hands of the spiritualists, who held their seances every Sunday evening, much to the amusement of the public. After that humbug was exploded, Hope Chapel remained unoccupied for some time. The interior was then rearranged as a lecture-room, though few were successful in it. The Boone Children played there with considerable success one season, after which the house was held by different peripatetic exhibitions.

The first regular performance given in the building was that of Kelly & Leon's Minstrels, when they entirely remodeled the interior, and obliterated all traces of the old chapel by erecting a gallery and building a handsome stage, with appropriate drop-curtain and scenery. This company proved very successful, and held possession of the house for several seasons, owing to the production of amusing local sketches, such as "The Japs," "The Charcoal Burners," &c.

The musical resources of the troupe also enabled them to bring out in good style all of the leading operas bouffes. Leon attracting much attention by his rendition of the principal female characters. "The Grande Duchess," "La Bell-I-N," "Barbe Bleue," and other operas by Offenbach, were neatly performed, with nearly all of the original music, with considerable new comic business.

Kelly & Leon finally abandoned New-York and went to fill a London engagement, the house again falling into a temporary home for all sorts of theatrical companies. Lina Edwin then leased the place and opened it as a theatre, with a regular stock company, achieving considerable success under her own management. Miss Edwin, on leaving for the provinces, gave an engagement to Miss Laura Keene, who played her own drama of "Hunted Down" for two or three weeks, and then appeared in a round of her favorite characters.

The house then fell into the hands of Kelly & Leon, whose company played one season, and again abandoned it for a traveling tour. Recently Emerson's Minstrels occupied the building, only closing their season on last Saturday evening. On Monday night last Kelly & Leon opened again for the third time, and were becoming popular once more, when the fire this morning closed their managerial speculation.

Another Account.

Between 2 and 3 o'clock this morning, a disastrous fire broke out in the Arion Concert Saloon, No. 730 Broadway, and in a few moments the whole building, including Lina Edwin's Theatre, formerly known as Hope Chapel, was in flames, which spread to the surrounding buildings, Nos. 716, 718, and 720 Broadway.

The Fire Department were quickly on the scene, but owing to the inflammable material, they soon discovered that all attempts to save the theatre would be superfluous, and they directed their attention to saving the adjoining buildings. The light wood-work of the concert-saloon and threw up a flame which was seen for miles around.

The private family of Mr. Samuel J. Lewis, who reside at No. 716, had just retired to bed, but were soon awoke by the smoke, and rushed to the street, just in time to escape the fury of the flames. They crossed over to the New-York Hotel without having time to save anything from the house.

To the horror of the spectators who had assembled on Broadway, it was discovered that an old lady was upstairs in No. 716. Officer O'Reilly, of the Fifteenth Precinct, rushed up and found the old lady, her daughter, and an infant about six days old, in bed. He assured them and took them to the New-York Hotel.

The scene in the hallway of the hotel was very exciting. Several of the people who reside in the endangered buildings were walking around in dishabille, some not having had time to put on their garments. They had rushed out in the cold, and made for the hotel as soon as they had discovered the fire.

The clerk at once furnished rooms for their convenience.

Such goods as could be secured were placed on the sidewalk, and officers detailed to watch them.

The gentleman who lives next door to the Arion, says that if the Police had only continued to do their duty, which they vigorously commenced last week, the fire would never have occurred. The Arion was closed by the Police during the "raids," but on Tuesday night the girls again made their appearance, and probably the disaster last night was owing to their assistance.

In less time than it have after the first alarm, the theatre was nothing but a mass of smoking ruins, while the adjoining buildings were nearly totally destroyed.

The theatre opened on Monday with Kelley & Leon, the old lessees, and the performance ended last night about 11 o'clock, when everything appeared as usual. The concert-saloon was open almost until the breaking out of the fire.

About 3 o'clock the flames began to subside. The Fire Department used all their endeavors to stop the progress of the fire, but the material was too inflammable.

The total loss will exceed $50,000.

How the Niagara Suspension Bridge Stands the Test of Time.

From the Lockport Journal, Nov. 26.

It is now some twenty years since the great suspension bridge was built over the Niagara River. The question of its safety has recently been agitated, and critical investigation has accordingly been made by the Chief Engineer and Directors of the Great Western Railway. The caps on the towers covering the cables have been removed, and the cables found to be as perfect in all respects as ever they were. But most important of all, the anchorage of the cables was thoroughly inspected. The masonry over one of them was removed for about twelve feet, or below where the wires are attached to the anchor chains. A portion of the cable is imbedded in water-lime cement. For twenty years this has been there, yet, on removing it and rubbing the paint off the wires, the latter were found as bright and perfect as when placed there; the cement having preserved the wire and anchor chains intact. The examination was made in the presence of competent engineers, who have expressed themselves as above to the directors of the bridge company.

The Equitable Trust Company.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, Nov. 26, 1872.

It is a singular coincidence that your article in today's issue, entitled "A New Link Between Borrowers and Lenders," should have appeared simultaneously with the first advertisement of the Equitable Trust Company, offering for sale mortgage bonds taken by that Company upon the investment of its own capital of a million of dollars in the Western States, precisely as your article suggests.

The need of such an intermediatory agency between the surplus capital of Europe and the Eastern States, and the wants and absolute securities of our Western country, which seems to have impressed your mind so as to produce the article in question, had previously impressed the minds of a large number of our wealthiest, most responsible, and trustworthy capitalists and business men, familiar with the opportunities for the investment of capital in the way you suggest, and also aware of the advantage that such a use of capital might be to both lenders and borrowers.

For the purpose of inaugurating this business, they have organized the Equitable Trust Company. Its capital is one million of dollars, which it is loaning under the most stringent rules and investigation in the Western country, employing only experienced agents, conservative appraisers, and reliable and honest counsel.

The securities taken by the company are similar in form and appearance to the usual railroad bond, with its coupons, &c. Each bond is for $1,000, is seven (7) per cent. interest, and bears the absolute guarantee of the company. Both principal and interest (semi-annually) are paid at the New-York office of the company. Thus the holder of each bond obtains not only what is esteemed the best security in the world, namely, a well-selected bond and mortgage, but the guarantee of a wealthy corporation, insuring promptitude of payment, which, to a small investor, is often of as much importance as the ultimate security of his investment.

By referring to the advertisement of the Equitable Trust Company, you will see that the names of the trustees are those of our very best citizens, such as are not usually found combined in one enterprise, and such as are in themselves a guarantee of the entire trustworthiness of the corporation. The sole object of the trustees of the company is to make its bonds the very best security ever offered upon this market, and every suggestion tending to carry out this object or to increase the conservatism of its management, has been and will be adopted. The limit of the guarantee of the company is fixed at a little more than one-half of the amount considered safe and usually adopted by the mortgage insurance companies of Germany, who do a business very similar to the Equitable Trust Company.

All further information will be cheerfully given at the office of the company, No. 78 Cedar-street. JONATHAN EDWARDS, President.

The New-Jersey Railroad and Canal Case.

Mr. Browning closed the argument, yesterday, on the question whether the appeal from the Chancellor's decision, refusing to restrain the execution of the lease of the New-Jersey Railroad and Canal to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, shall be dismissed. The Court decided that the appeal must be heard, and that the rule to show cause must be discharged. This brings the whole question of the lease before the Court of Errors and Appeals. The Court decided not to hear the argument this term.

The decision in regard to the Jersey City Police Commissioners will probably be given on Monday.

Herring's Safes in the Boston Fire.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The owners of the Herring's Safes will be gratified to know that their reputation has been fully sustained by the recent ordeal in Boston, and that no valuables intrusted to their care have been lost.

Owing to the competition among local manufacturers, and past immunity of the place from extensive fires, our safes have never been offered for sale in that city, and the few that were exposed in the great conflagration were purchased by New-York houses, and sent to Boston for use. How well they did their duty let the following letters testify:

HERRINGS & FARREL.

Nos. 251 and 252 Broadway.

BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 13, 1872.

Messrs. Herrings & Farrel, Nos. 251 and 252 Broadway, New-York:

GENTLEMEN: In the "Great Fire" which has destroyed the business portion of this city, we had in use one of your "Champion" Safes, and which we were unable to recover from the ruins this P. M., on account of the intense heat which surrounded it. When we opened it, we were agreeably surprised to find our books, papers, &c., in fine condition.

Yours, &c.,

J. C. BURRAGE & CO.

ANOTHER.

BOSTON, Nov. 14, 1872.

Messrs. Herrings & Farrel:

GENTLEMEN: Our store, No. 38 Summer-street, was burned in the late "Great Fire" in this city of Nov. 9 and 10. Our books and papers were in one of your "Patent Champion Safes," and were all preserved in good condition. Our store was burned about 10 o'clock Saturday evening, but, on account of the heat, we could not get at the safe until the Tuesday following—over sixty hours after the fire. We consider this fire no ordinary test for safes, and take pleasure in giving facts as above.

Very truly yours,

PORTER BROTHERS & CO.

The J. H. Coleman Case—Statement of Mr. J. O'C. Fabb.

Inquiries were made by TIMES reporters yesterday as to the reputed flight of James H. Coleman, a lawyer of this City, who has been appointed upon many occasions a referee by ex-Judge Barnard, when the latter presided in the Supreme Court. Mr. James O'Connor Fabb, who is now attending to Mr. Coleman's law business, was visited. He said that Mr. Coleman left this City on the steam-ship City of Paris on the 21st of October last. For a long time prior to his intended departure, thousands of his friends had full knowledge of his contemplated trip. There was no secrecy about it. Hundreds of his friends saw him take his departure on the steamer. His return to his residence here is certain, when he completes his tour in Europe, and, indeed, should anything arise requiring his presence before the tour is ended he will come back. He has not disposed of his property, but, on the contrary, he is largely interested in real estate in this City, and carried with him nothing but what he deemed necessary for the social and ordinary expenses of a tour in Europe. He was indebted for whatever advantages he in common with others received from Barnard to introductions he brought with him to this City from Albany, where he was first admitted to the Bar, studying law under Mr. Peter Cagger, who had given him letters to Barnard and others. Mr. Coleman, Mr. Fabb said, had never sold any real estate jointly with Barnard, and only took, in an Erie case in which he was interested, the sum of money which the parties concerned awarded him.

Mr. Coleman, instead of being in Cuba, as reported, is now in London, from which place he purposes visiting the Continent.

Mr. Fabb was under the impression that the statement made in the morning journal that Mr. Coleman was in Cuba, again, coupled with the assertion that he was arrested recently on account of his introduction to Barnard by Gen. Sickles, was malicious in every particular.

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

At the Exchange yesterday, Wednesday, Nov. 27, by order of the Court of Common Pleas in foreclosure, under the direction of A. G. Vanderpool, Esq., referee, Muller, Wilkins & Co. disposed of four two-story basement and attic, high-stoop, light-stone front houses and lots, situate on the east side of Madison-avenue, 20.11 feet north of One Hundred and Thirty-second-street, lots each 20 by 99, for $10,000, $11,375, $10,050, and $11,325, respectively. The premises were sold subject to a mortgage on each house amounting, with interest, to $8,000, and the prices noted include the sum in each case. The houses are not yet entirely finished. They were all bought by James E. Shaw, the owner of second mortgages on the property. Messrs. Muller & Co. also offered at public auction the premises known as No. 37 Essex-street, near Hester-street, a lot 25 by 412, and four-story brick house thereon, and the premises No. 13 Norfolk-street, near Hester-street, a lot 22 by 65, and four-story and basement brick building thereon; neither of these were sold, however, although the first-named property was bid off for $4,100, and the second for $6,500. The following sale by E. H. Ladlow & Co., under a Supreme Court foreclosure decree, Henry Nicoll, Esq., referee, completed the day's business: Four-story and basement brown-stone front house and lot, situate on the east side of Madison-avenue, 62.2 feet north of Twenty-ninth-street, lot 20 by 77; sold to Henry Volkening, for $20,500. Today being Thanksgiving, the Exchange will be closed.

At private contract, Wm. H. Rayner, No. 54 Pine-street, reports having recently sold four tall lots on the south side of East Fifty-eighth-street, 75 feet east of Fifth-avenue, for $30,000.

A SPECIAL MEETING OF THE Board of Trustees of this Bank, held this day, at the Banking-house, the following resolution was adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God to call from this life our friend, co-trustee, and late Vice-President, Robert James Dillon; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That in his death the Board deplores the loss of one whose equal ability, untiring zeal, and unceasing watchfulness over the interests of this Institution, have contributed more than we can express to its success from its inception to the present day.

That we realize in his family our most sincere sympathy in their affliction, and that this Board will ever cherish his memory.

That we tender to

THANKSGIVING DAY.

Universal Observance in all Circles of Society.

Delicacies for the Rich and Poor—Scenes in the Markets and Streets—Today's Programme in the Institutions and Churches.

There will be a general observance of the November holiday Thanksgiving today—the young and old, rich and poor, having been provided for. For many days past the various introductory ceremonies which herald this feasting-day have engaged general attention. Turkey-raffles, and the jolly episodes of that character have been enjoyed, and last night all the preliminary incidents culminated. Today a test of substantial matter will be attacked, and, as is usual on this day, fowl will bear the palm. Arrangements have been made by the charitable organizations, on a scale commensurate with the demands of the lower ten thousand, to supply them with a plentiful supply of delicacies of the season. The poor and lowly will have their "turkey and dressing," in as gross a quantity as the upper million. The Times of yesterday gave a complete statement of the ruling order of business, and prices about the various markets. Today there is only left the detail of to what extent the good things there exhibited will be enjoyed.

General attention on a day like this turns toward the poor, and a very large proportion of these will be found at the churches. A solemn high mass of the Roman Catholic Union will be celebrated at St. Patrick's Cathedral at 10 o'clock, when Right Rev. Bernard J. McQuade, D. D., Bishop of Rochester, will preach. The churches of the various denominations will also afford opportunity for Christian thanksgiving.

The charitable people have arranged a very creditable programme, and before night their praises will be loudly chanted by the little ones, who enjoy the recurrence of this day with greater zest than those who delight in what millions may purchase.

The Children's Aid Society, at No. 927 Rivington street, No. 709 East Eleventh-street, and No. 311 West Eighteenth-street, beside at the twenty-two industrial schools, will provide a dinner and sociable. A party will be given the girls at the lodging-house, No. 27 St. Mark's-place, and and evening entertainment will be provided at the Newsboy's Lodging-house, No. 49 Park-place.

At the Midnight Mission, No. 240 Greene-street, there will be services of holy communion, and a dinner served to the twenty inmates.

The Ladies' Five Points Mission will entertain 300 children. At 2 P. M. there will be singing, recitations, and addresses. At 4 P. M. a dinner will be served. New clothing will be distributed to 400 of the children.

At the Five Points House of Industry a dinner will be provided for 800 children.

At the House of Refuge, Randall's Island, religious services will be held at 10½ A. M., followed by an extra dinner. The afternoon will be given up to out-door sports, and in the evening delicacies of the season will be served.

At St. Barnabas' House, No. 304 Mulberry-street, religious services will be held in the morning, after which a dinner will be given.

The day will be observed at the Howard Mission and House for Little Wanderers, No. 40 New Bowery, with the usual festivities.

The Female Guardian Society will give the 300 inmates of the Home for the Friendless, at No. 83 East Thirtieth-street, a dinner suitable to the occasion, in addition to which there will be interesting exercises in the chapel at 2½ and 6½ P. M.

Dinners will also be furnished to the inmates of the Wilson Industrial school, at St. Mark's-place and Avenue A; the Union Home and School for the Orphans of Volunteers; the Water-street Mission and Home for Women, No. 273 Water-street; St. Joseph's Home for the Aged, No. 209 West Fifteenth-street; the Protestant Half-Orphan Asylum, N. W. West Twelfth-street; the Sheltering Arms; the Home for Training Young Girls, at Seventh avenue and Fourteenth street; the Samaritan Home for the Aged, in Fourteenth-street, near Ninth-avenue, and the Association for the Benefit of Colored Orphans.

The service of the holy communion will be administered in the morning at the Midnight Mission, No. 240 Greene-street, by Rev. Thomas Gallaudet, D. D., of St. Ann's P. E. Church. A dinner will be served to the inmates, and a social time in the evening, with games, music, and refreshments, will follow.

The trains leaving the City yesterday were crowded with passengers on their way to eat Thanksgiving dinners with their relatives and friends. The Boston boats also commanded a fair share of patronage.

Today will be observed as a close holiday in Wall-street. The Stock Exchange closed yesterday at 3 P. M., and the street was deserted much earlier than usual, in consequence.

The United States Circuit and District Courts, the offices of the United States Commissioners, the Marshal's office, and the offices of the Court Clerks will be closed in honor of the day. The official business in the United States Court building, on Chambers-street, will be suspended.

The thoroughfares leading to the principal markets were, last night, thronged with busy matrons and children, toiling under the weight of their purveyors and "fixings." The sidewalks of Grand-street and the Bowery seemed to be given up entirely to the bearers of the inevitable turkey, while, until a late hour, Vesey-street and the vicinity of Washington Market were rendered almost impassable from similar causes. Quite a reduction in the price of the turkey was visible at all the markets as the late hours approached. In Washington Market healthy-looking fowl could be had for eighteen and fifteen cents per pound, and doubtful-looking birds were sold even as low as 10c. per pound. The neglected geese came in for an unusual share of attention last night, possibly the cheapness of the article causing its ready sale. Apparently fine geese were sold at 16c. per pound, and ducks and chickens at about the same. A number of stalls in Washington Market disposed of several hundred turkeys and fowl, geese by throwing them among the crowd of vagrant women and children, who, seizing them, sped away with their prizes under their arms, to give thanks in their own way.

At All Soul's Church, corner of Fourth-avenue and Twentieth-street, Rev. Dr. Bellows will preach at 11 A. M., on the "General and Special Grounds of Gratitude to Almighty God."

Right Rev. Bishop Clarke, of Rhode Island, will preach in the Calvary Church, corner of Fourth-avenue and Twenty-first-street, at 10½ A. M.

In the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, in West Forty-fifth-street, between Broadway and Eighth-avenue, communion service will be solemnized at 10½ A. M. Evening prayer at 4½ P. M.

The Congregation B'nai Jeshurun, of Thirty-fourth-street, will hold Thanksgiving service at 11 A. M., when Rev. Dr. Vidaver will officiate.

In the Forty-fourth-street Synagogue services will be held at 11 A. M.; sermon, by Rev. S. M. Isaacs.

Rev. H. D. Ganse will officiate in the Madison-avenue Church, corner of Fifty-seventh-street; services commencing at 11 A. M.

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage will preach on "City and National Politics" in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, on Schermerhorn-street, at 11 A. M. George D. Morgan will preside at the organ.

In the Seventh-street M. E. Church, near Third-avenue, Rev. J. Parker will deliver a Thanksgiving discourse at 11 o'clock A. M.

"The Lord's Kindness in a Strong City" will form the base of a discourse at the Spring-street Presbyterian Church, (near Varick,) by Rev. G. M. McCampbell.

Rev. J. D. Wilson will preach in the Fifty-sixth-street Central Church, (near Broadway,) at 11 A. M.

Thanksgiving service will be held in St. Paul's M. E. Church, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-second-street, at 11 o'clock. Sermon by Rev. T. M. Eddy.

United services will be held in the Methodist-Episcopal Church, Hoboken, N. J., at 11 A. M. Rev. Jas. Marsh will officiate.

Today a parade of the New-York Turner Cadets, followed by military exercises and target shooting at the armory of the Fifth Regiment, will occur. The theatres will give matinee entertainments.

A feature of the day will be the target excursions, of which there will be a general variety.

Thanksgiving Day will be observed in New-Jersey by a general suspension of business, and by the usual exercises and festivities. The public offices, banks, and the principal places of business will be closed for the day and evening. Services will be held in the churches of all the cities and villages. Target excursions of companies from Newark, Paterson, and Jersey City and balls and social gatherings for the evening are announced.

Festival at Children's Aid Society German School.

The German evening school under the care of the Children's Aid Society, and presided over by Miss Annie Strathern, was the scene, last evening, of a delightful festival. The parents and relatives of the pupils crowded all the reception-room to its extent. The exercises, consisting of songs, recitations, and German choruses, were characterized by the usual display of true German sentiment. Addresses in German were delivered by Messrs. Dinge and Secondlenger, and Mr. J. Mogy, Assistant Secretary of the Children's Aid Society, spoke in English. After the exercises were concluded, a generous supply of refreshments was served.

INDIANA.

Official Vote for President by Congressional Districts.

The returns of the votes of the Congressional Districts of Indiana for Presidential electors were opened and canvassed by the Governor and Secretary of State on Monday, and found to be as follows:

District.	Grant.	Greeley.	O'Conor.
First	13,551	12,776	28
Second	13,812	12,971	43
Third	14,078	12,668	25
Fourth	14,120	12,244	38
Fifth	13,924	12,528	29
Sixth	15,054	13,793	139

Eleventh	12,476	12,256	168
Totals	176,123	162,223	1,474

The total vote in October was 271,317; now it is 351,158, there being one anti-Mason vote. Browne, Republican, had for Governor, in October, 268,376, and Hendricks, Democrat, 139,434.

NEW-JERSEY.

Complete Official Vote for President and Members of Congress.

The Board of State Canvassers of New-Jersey declared the result of the vote of that State on Tuesday. It appears that O'Conor received 408 votes, and that the vote for the leading candidates on the Grant and Greeley electoral tickets was, by counties, as follows:

Counties.	Grant.	Greeley.	Counties.	Grant.	Greeley.
Atlantic	1332	852	Middlesex	4952	4054

The funeral services of the late Mr. Robert James Dillon will take place in St. Patrick's Cathedral, on Mott-street, to-morrow morning, at 10½.

Bridget Toul, aged twenty-five, a domestic, left her home, No. 45 First-street, several days ago, to seek employment, and has not since been seen or heard from by her friends.

Roundsman E. S. McGlotte, of the Fifth Precinct, and Patrolman John Lanry, of the Eleventh Precinct, were dismissed the Department by the Board of Police yesterday.

A meeting of the Board of Trustees of the College of the City of New-York was held yesterday, Mr. B. Smyth, presiding, when arrangements were made for the course of study and the admission of members.

A meeting of the New-England Society will be held at Delmonico's to-morrow evening to receive the report of the Committee on a new charter and by-laws, and to nominate a board of officers for the ensuing year.

A preliminary examination in the case of Dr. Julius A. Julian, of No. 615 Pearl-street, arrested for sending circulars advertising obscene articles through the mails, was begun before Commissioner Osborn yesterday.

Morris Peizer and Jacob Peizer, who had been arrested and taken before Commissioner Shields, on a complaint of fraudulent bankruptcy, were yesterday dismissed, after a thorough examination into the facts.

Robert McNeil, of No. 276 East One Hundred and Tenth-street, has been locked up on a charge of seriously assaulting James Tranor, during a fight, on Monday night, at One Hundred and Tenth-street.

Prof. E. P. Stevens will lecture this evening, before the Polytechnic Institute, in Hall No. 24, Cooper Union, on the "Geographical Distribution of Iron Ores in the United States," and Dr. L. Feuchtwanger discourse on "Dolomites."

John Zeiling, residing in One Hundred and Forty-fourth-street, during a fit of abstraction, attempted to walk over the Harlem Bridge while the draw was open yesterday. He was rescued from drowning by Officer Dougherty, of the Twelfth Precinct.

A large number of applicants were examined, yesterday, for the vacant position in the New-York Custom-house. The candidates generally passed very creditable examinations. The names of the successful applicants have not yet been announced.

William Leahman, of No. 308 West Thirty-third-street, went out running in Westchester County, about a month ago, and a premature discharge of his fowling-piece badly shattered his left arm. Erysipelas set in, and he died in Bellevue Hospital, yesterday.

At Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, a tailor named William Smith, of Fifty-eighth-street, and Twenty-first-street, was committed for trial without bail, on a charge of snatching a gold watch from the person of Cullen P. Grandin, of No. 62 State-street, Brooklyn.

Dr. Ludwig Buechner delivered last night, at Steinway Hall, the third of a course of four lectures on natural history and science. The subject of the discourse was, "Conception, Transmission, and the Soul," tending to show that the latter is nothing but a manifestation of life.

Judge Woodruff, of the United States Circuit Court, yesterday rendered a decision opening the default in the case of ex-Collector Bailey, in which his sureties are liable for $700,000, on the ground of insufficiency of notice. The argument on demurrer will now be heard before Judge Woodruff.

Owing to the inclement state of the weather on Tuesday, the Grand Jury of the Court of General Sessions did not make the proposed visit to the Lunatic Asylum on Ward's Island. A new Grand Jury will be sworn on Monday next, and it is hoped they will take the matter in hand.

The case of the Milwaukee Fire and Marine Insurance Company against David Dows & Co., of this City, to recover the value of 35,000 bushels of wheat, which has been before Judge Shipman and a jury, in the United States Circuit Court, for several days, was decided yesterday by a verdict for the plaintiff of $22,372 38.

Patrick Wilson, aged twenty-five, residing at Fifty-fourth-street and First-avenue, in removing stone from the barge Tacony, at the foot of Sixty-second-street, East River, yesterday morning, was struck on the head by a falling derrick, and fatally injured. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where he died soon after admission.

Henry Burrows and John Henry were brought before Justice Ledwith, at Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, on a charge of having burglariously entered the furnishing-store of Charles J. Burnett, No. 684 Eighth-avenue, and stolen $600 worth of property. They were remanded to the Station-house to await inquiry.

The ladies of All Angels' Episcopal Church, corner Eighty-first-street and Eleventh-avenue, intend to open a Fair, on Tuesday, Dec. 3, and it will be continued on Friday, 6th, and Saturday, 7th, at Continental Hall, corner of Eighth-avenue and Thirty-fourth-street. The proceeds are to be devoted to the building fund of the church.

Christian Lorenz was yesterday arrested by Deputy Marshal Purvis, and taken before Commissioner Osborn, charged with running an illicit still in the cellar at No. 1,773 Third-avenue, where the prisoner is engaged in making vinegar. He claimed that his partner kept the vinegar-still without his knowledge. Lorenz was held in $500 for examination.

A regular meeting of the Department of Public Instruction was held yesterday. A communication was received from the Mayor announcing the appointment of Hon. Smith Ely, Jr., as Commissioner of Public Instruction, in place of Lewis Ingersoll, who resigned; also that of James W. Booth, Trustee of the Ninth Ward School, in place of Dr. Andrew Warner, deceased. On motion, the Controller was requested to deposit $400,000, the balance of the appropriation of 1872, with the City Chamberlain.

The death of August Schulta, of No. 40 North Moore-street, a truck-driver, who was found suffering from compression of the brain, in West Broadway, near Duane-street, on the night of the 16th inst., was the subject of investigation by Coroner Herrman yesterday. Detective Field, of the Fifth Precinct, found two boys who stated that Schulta had fallen from his truck. It was further proven that Schulta was intoxicated when found by the Police. The jury found that his death resulted from violence, received in a manner unknown to them.

BROOKLYN.

The house of Charles Stihringer, No. 57 Union-avenue, was yesterday entered by sneak thieves, and robbed of watches and jewelry to the amount of $250.

A lad named Joseph Dingwell, the son of the captain of a canal boat, lying at the foot of Hudson-street, Newark, was burned to death on the boat at 11 o'clock on Tuesday night, the cabin having taken fire. The boy was a lunatic, and, it is presumed, had himself started the fire in the cabin.

The Commissioners of Appeal of the town of Greenville have been hearing the complaints of tax-payers this week, of which there were an unprecedented number. In many cases it is found that the taxes are more than the total cost of the property. Worthless swamp lands are assessed at $1,000 and $2,000, and wood-land at $6,000 per acre.

Officers Wright and Henry were examined yesterday before Justice Wilde, of Hoboken, on a charge of cruelly beating Edward Torpey and Thomas Ryan, in Con Donovan's saloon, Washington-street. The officers were held in bail to appear for trial. Torpey and Ryan were subsequently arrested and taken before Recorder Bohmerich, where the Chief of Police appeared against them, and they were held in $5,000 bail each, on a charge of perjury.

LONG ISLAND.

Martin Costigan, a laboring man, of Willet's Point, died suddenly, yesterday morning, in the prison at Flushing.

Henry Traub, of Winfield, and a friend attempted to cross the track of the Flushing Railroad, in a wagon, yesterday afternoon. The horse was killed, the wagon demolished, and the two men narrowly escaped.

SOCIAL REFORM.

Progress of the Movement in the Fifth and Eighth Wards—Christmas Dinners for the Poor—Increase of the Fund.

The recent visitation of the Fifth and Eighth Wards by the members of St. John's Guild has revealed a chapter of human misery and suffering which can hardly be realized. Nearly eight hundred families, including 3,500 children, are in utter destitution, suffering for food, clothes, and fuel. Most of these people belong to the working classes, and, had they employment, could support themselves; but this is the dull season in almost all kinds of business, hence the wide-spread distress. How these people subsist is a mystery. After work stops and their money is exhausted they begin to sell off articles of furniture, at first those they need least, then the stove, bed, and anything that will bring the price of a loaf. Last of all, the children's clothes are disposed of in order to keep the little ones from starvation. Then comes the great struggle to keep soul and body together, aided often by the practical charity of their poor though not wholly-destitute neighbors, a spectacle which few who have not witnessed it would believe. A morsel of bread from one, a little meal from another, a pail of coal or a handful of fire-wood from a third, is the main dependence of these poor people during the severest season of the year. This charity must necessarily be uncertain, so that many families were discovered who had not tasted food for twenty-four hours.

In addition to giving these poor people immediate assistance in the shape of bread, groceries, clothes, and fuel, it is now proposed to provide them with a substantial dinner on Christmas Day at their own homes. Henry Simmons, No. 71 Murray-street, has kindly offered to cook 1,000 turkeys free of charge, and J. D. Hadley, agent of the American Merchants' Union Express Company, has volunteered to distribute them on Christmas morning. One hundred members of the Guild, one for each block, will be in attendance to superintend the distribution of these dinners. Having made these arrangements, the society now asks for more money, with which to purchase the necessary articles to make a complete dinner for each destitute family, the only one they have probably tasted for many weeks.

The following are the disbursements made by the Guild for bread, groceries, milk, clothes, shoes, and medicines during the past week:

3,947 loaves of bread and 1,084 quarts milk	$285 96
Groceries	36 78
423 garments given to 137 persons, cost of material	96 00
Eighty-three pairs shoes	130 00
Medicines	18 84
